Collision With Overhead Damages Riding Device

The "Flyplane," a riding device with Lawrence Greater Show, now playing at the Kent & Sussex Fair here, took a beating last week when it collided with an overhead over U. S. 13 at Black Cat, just south of Wilmington.
Not having sufficient clearance, the $18,000 ride, which had just come from the factory, was badly damaged. According to Louis Hoffman, publicity man for the shows, this entailed considerable repairs on the individual cars of the device, with some equipment having to be rushed from the manufacturer at Salem, Ore.

Jarrell Enthusiastic About Gas Fertilizer

Lawrence M. Jarrell, who lives near McGinness Pond, near Frederica, is sold on the use of gaseous fertilizer after 16 acres of Thorne wheat, treated with the new soil builder, averaged 34 bushels to the acre this summer.

Cost of the fertilizer, for the entire field, was only $79. Beside it was another 16-acre field, covered with chicken manure and 300 pounds of 0-20-20 fertilizer at a cost of $150, which returned 28 to 30 bushels per acre.

The gas, anhydrous ammonia, is 81 per cent nitrogen.

Jarrell said, however, it cost about the same as other topdressing materials but that it secured a better yield and it was more convenient to handle.

The Frederica farmer applied the gas fertilizer about March 10 with equipment purchased from Suburban Farm Service Company, Delmar. This equipment was comprised of a tank of liquid fertilizer, a pump, and special teeth.

Jarrell said the liquid is under pressure and that it becomes a gas when it is applied about six inches into the ground by tubes and special teeth. This ammonia-type nitrogen, he said, locks with the soil particles and does not travel as does nitrate nitrogen.

Using anhydrous ammonia, Jarrell said he got the best yield of wheat he had ever had.

The application equipment can also be used on other crops. Jarrell has used it this year on 180 acres of his own corn and on about 200 acres for other persons, including 30 acres belonging to R. W. Vane, of Harrington.

FARM NEWS - REVIEW - FORECAST

Harvey Built Milk Houses As They Grew

"They didn't require a milk house back in 1921, but I wanted a clean place to care for my milk, so I built a wooden eight-by-ten-foot building on my own accord," declared Harvey Durham of Cheswold recently.

Shortly after Mr. and Mrs. Durham were married, they rented the farm on which they now live from his father, and started their career of producing milk. It was there, in 1921, that they built their first wooden structure milk house. Since their herd consisted of only 14 milking cows, the house was of sufficient size.

Prior to 1936, before Pet began operating a receiving unit in Dover, Harvey sold his milk to another dealer. Then in 1941, when Harvey purchased the old homestead, his herd had increased and he needed more room, so a new concrete block 10-by-12-foot structure replaced the original.

Harvey's herd had increased to 45 milking cows by 1951. Once again the milk house in use had been outgrown and on his own accord, Harvey built a modern 12-by-20-foot two-room milk house adjacent to the stable. It was fully equipped with hot water heater, wash tanks, an electric cooler and ample storage space, and represents the Durham's labors and progress of 30 years in dairying.

All three houses are still in use on the farm. The 1921 model houses his water pump; the 1941 model has been converted into a fine laundry room for Mrs. Durham; and, of course, the 1951 model is the center of operation for the main source of his income.

Along with his dairy farming, Harvey produces annually around 3000 bushels of corn and about 1400 bushels of wheat. The remainder of his farm acreage is used for pasture land and hay.

"I feel that if I didn't concentrate on a large acreage of permanent pasture, I wouldn't be able to maintain my present herd," remarked Mr. Durham. His permanent pasture, a well-balanced mixture of Ladino clover and orchard grass, provides annually sufficient forage for his herd throughout the grazing season.

Mr. and Mrs. Durham are to be commended for their advancement in developing dairying on their farm to the extent that it now exists.

300 Attend Snap Bean Harvester Demonstration in Md.

More than 300 snap bean growers and canners from Maryland, Virginia, Delaware and Pennsylvania attended a demonstration of a mechanical snap bean harvester at the Foard Brothers farm, Hydes, Md., July 15 and 16. In addition to the demonstration, the University of Maryland, sponsors of the event, conducted experiments to determine the efficiency of the harvester.

The demonstration is the first to be held outside New York State, although the harvester and similar models developed by the Chrisolm-Ryder Company, Niagara Falls, New York, have been tested by the manufacturer over a period of 5 years. This year, several harvesters are being tested in various commercial snap bean producing regions all over the country to determine the effect of climate and other local conditions on the efficiency of the picker.

The tests conducted by Dr. Francis Stark, and other University of Maryland horticulturalists, are designed to determine the efficiency of the picker compared with hand picking, the relative costs and yields, and the suitability to machine harvesting of four different varieties.

The researchers are also studying the efficiency of the cleaner which is used with the harvester.

This week, the harvester will be used for a second picking harvest, in a field that had first been picked by hand. Dr. Stark explains that this year the beans at the Foard Brothers farm are yielding heavier on the second picking than on the first. Normally, the first picking yield is 75 per cent of the total, whereas this year, the first picking is yielding only 35 per cent of the total. When the mechanical harvester is used, only one picking can be obtained, and it is important that the picking be timed for the period of greatest yield, Dr. Stark says. In cases where yields are low, it would be advantageous to pick the first crop by hand and to use the picker on the second crop, Dr. Stark explains.

The mechanical harvester's success, according to the horticulturalists conducting the demonstration and experiment, depends largely on the economy of harvesting a single crop. Then too, bean varieties must be found or developed that are adapted for mechanical harvesting.

After handpicking of the second crop is completed this week, the research men will compare the results of hand picking with mechanical harvesting and report their findings to bean growers and packers of the four-state area.

Bridgeville Boy Wins Scholarship

John F. Ray, 18, of Bridgeville, is the winner of the 1952 Esso 4-H Scholarship at the University of Delaware. John will enter the School of Agriculture as a freshman in September. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William M. Ray.

He was awarded the $100 scholarship on the basis of his 4-H record, and leadership in high school and community activities. A member of the Bridgeville Live Wires Club, John has been in 4-H for seven years. He has carried projects in field crops, gardening, and swine. As state field crops winner, he was a delegate to the 1950 National 4-H Club Congress. Also in 1950, his part in a team demonstration won for him a trip to the National Junior Vegetable Growers' Convention in New Orleans. His agricultural interest carried over to high school, where he took field crops in FFA work. He graduated from the Bridgeville High School this June. He served as an officer in the Varsity Club, baseball team, dramatics club, archery club, band, and rifle club. He was vice-president of his senior class, is an Eagle Scout, and has been vice-president of the Methodist Youth Fellowship.

Agronomy and horticulture are his special interests in agriculture. John says, "A college education seems to be a necessity for every young man who really wants to make a success of farming. My 4-H Club work helped me decide that I really wanted to make agriculture my career."

The Esso Scholarship is awarded annually, and continued four years of college, if scholastic work is satisfactory. Other scholarship winners now at the University are Robert Lee Carey, Bridgeville; William Glen Dill, Milford; and Roland L. Hearn, Laurel.

10 WORLD'S RECORDS
Prove it's Good!
You know, as we do, that world's records depend on skillful breeding and management. Much credit, therefore, goes to the owners and managers of these record cows.
However, we do mention these ten world's records to help prove our claim that Beacon Dairy Feeds promote high production. Beacon users know this. Owners of high record cows know it. And, if you're not already using Beacon Feeds, we want you to know it, too.
