SPIDERWORT
©1953 National Wildlife Federation

The National Wildlife Federation is dedicated to the "intelligent management of the life-sustaining resources of the earth—its productive soil, its essential water resources, its protective forests and plantlife, and its dependent wildlife—and to promote and encourage the knowledge and appreciation of these resources, their inter-relationship and wise use, without which there can be little hope for a continuing abundant life." Into this picture we can fit well a consideration of the Spiderwort, the spider, spittle insect, the spigole and possibly something as ephemeral as the spume on a windblown breaker.

There are more than 30 species of Tradescantia, the genus to which the spiderwort belongs. Some are cultivated for their flowers, some for their foliage. The flowers may be small and inconspicuous or large and brilliantly colored. Railroad embankments in the Middle West often in late spring and early summer glow with the blue patches of spiderworts that may be reasonably identified from a speeding train.

The flowers of Spiderwort may be deep purple, pale blue to white or rose-colored depending in part on the species involved. Almost invariably they do not survive picking and quickly fade when pickled for bouquet purposes. However the fine hairs on the stamens are frequently sought by biology teachers who have noted the conspicuous streaming of protoplasm which may be seen in them with the help of a microscope. Some schools even keep a supply of Tradescantia living on the windowsill for the purpose of supplying this material for use in classes.

Pollination of Tradescantia in the wild is supposed to be effected primarily by queen bumblebees that seek the pollen for food and in gathering it carry some to the receptive stigmas of the pistils of the flowers. Some botanists have a great interest in studying what happens during the period when the elements of the stamens and pistils come together and in the chromosome number in numbers of the genus Tradescantia. While it is the usual thing for the members of a genus to have the chromosome numbers relatively close together, in Tradescantia the number may be 6, 8, 12, 13, 15, or 18 or even 24 with it going on up to 26, 32, 60 or 72 in species not found in North America in a native state. In the house plant Wandering Jew it may be 60. All this may be of little interest to the casual reader except to suggest that here on your windowsill or in your back yard may be a plant that may seem to be meek, demure and innocuous, yet it packs secrets that challenge the best of us. In view of this, who can say it is just a pretty weed?

ALONG THE ROAD

By Helen Sherwood
The halls are darkened but the whispers are there,
And the seconds of morning race on.
The clamor now's a little subdued,
While some in quiet slumber rest,
After the ending of another feud
Some have stood another test.
Just pricked by another devil's thorn
Along the wicked path
Only to make life's flowers bloom and gain wisdom in the after math.
We can't understand why it is this way
And the world seems upon our shoulder.
But as I've heard dear Mother say,
"You'll understand when your older."

When the sun rises once again
And Lord's will we arise,
Help us God to see our mistakes
As a little wisdom in disguise.

Research Helps E. Shore Tomato, Cantaloupe Growers

Tomato and cantaloupe growers on Maryland's eastern shore have increased profits by using a cultural method that requires no extra equipment, involves practically no extra labor and costs only a few cents per acre.

All they do is add small amounts of magnesium sulfate and borax twice a year to the solutions sprayed on the crops for disease and insect control.

The discovery that these materials can increase cantaloupe and tomato profits under soil conditions common on the eastern shore was made by scientists in the Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station.

"It all started in 1947," says Dr. Francis C. Stark, vegetable researcher in the University of Maryland horticulture department. "Controlled mineral nutrition studies with cantaloupes at that time showed that when the level of magnesium or borax supplied to the plant was very low, the melons lacked sweetness. The deficiency symptom of low magnesium levels was very similar to the symptom attributed to downy mildew."

"Field tests involving soil and foliar applications of these and many other minerals were inaugurated in 1949. All the plots except those that had been sprayed with magnesium sulfate showed the symptoms of magnesium deficiency. It was reasoned that a combination of magnesium sulfate and borax should show the most benefit, and the 1949 tests actually did prove the combination to be beneficial."

Subsequent tests with foliar, or leaf, feeding have shown that no other material or combination of materials has been as effective. Because of the favorable response to foliar feeding of cantaloupes similar work was undertaken with tomatoes in 1950. Tomatoes also responded to the same nutrient spray, which is the only treatment proved to be effective in these Eastern Shore experiments.

Cantaloupe profits are increased by the treatment because it makes a sweeter melon. "In most years the treatment has resulted in about a 15 per cent increase in the number of melons having greater than 8 per cent soluble solids," says Dr. Stark. (The soluble solids consist largely of sugars and are used as measure of sweetness).

Tomato profits are increased because the treatment results in a larger percentage of U. S. No. 1 grade fruit. Over a 4-year period the treatment increased the yield of U. S. No. 1 grade fruit by 21.5 per cent. This amounted to $54.02 more income per acre. The recommendation for applying the nutrients to cantaloupes is to add 4 pounds of magnesium sulfate (Epsom salts) and two pounds of borax to 100 gallons of fungicide spray. "Studies in 1953 indicate that the ideal times of application are when the vines start to run, and again when the crown set fruits are between one and two inches in diameter," Dr. Stark points out.

Recommendations for tomatoes are to add 4 pounds of magnesium sulfate and two pounds of borax per 100 gallons to fungicide sprays when the crown-set fruits begin to color, and again during the third week of harvest. "For an additional boost on later harvests a third application might be made about three weeks after the second application of nutrients," Dr. Stark adds.

The vegetable researcher points out that the nutrient treatment does not interfere with regular fungicide treatments if mixed with copper's such as zineb or manzate.

Favorable responses to the spray can be expected only in areas where magnesium and boron are not readily available to plants.

In line with the emphasis on safety, every precaution will be taken during the three days of the Delmarva Chicken Festival to insure safety for visitors and care for any accident or injury. Extra police will be detailed throughout the three days and a special corps of State Police under Capt. George P. Tidewell, will be on duty Wednesday, June 23, when the parade is scheduled to be held beginning at 6 p. m. In addition State Police will be augmented by Town Police from Georgetown and other towns in Sussex County. There will be two Red Cross First Aid Stations, one at the Georgetown Fire Hall, all three days of the Festival. On the last day, when the parade will be held there will be two additional First Aid Stations located at Pine

Three Kinds of Polio
Recent discoveries by scientists at four universities, Utah, Southern California, Kansas and Pittsburgh, have enabled doctors to state with virtual certainty that there are only three types of polio virus, each of which has been isolated and identified by science. Thus medicine has taken a tremendous step toward finally defeating polio by determining exactly the nature of this crippling enemy.

Keep Hogs Cool for Steady Gains

College Park, Md., June—Hot hogs don't put on much weight. In fact, if hogs get too overheated, they may even lose weight.

Boyd T. Whittle, University of Maryland Extension animal husbandman says that when temperatures get around 85 F or above it will pay farmers to provide hogs with some protection against heat. "And we can depend on temperatures above 85 in a Maryland summer," he adds.

There are several things a farmer can do to keep hogs comfortable, Whittle says. "One cheap and effective practice is to build shelters out of scrap lumber and put woven-wire and straw tops on them. These shelters can be placed in the pasture so hogs won't have to go far for shade while they are grazing."

The livestock specialist says hog wallows are also beneficial if properly constructed and kept sanitary. He cites experiments in Louisiana which show the value of wallows. "Hogs in these experiments that had access to wallows required 35 pounds less feed per 100 pounds of gain, and they gained 1/3 pound per day more than hogs that were not provided with wallows."

Whittle points out that hog wallows constructed of concrete are most desirable, and they must be cleaned frequently to prevent stagnation. About two square feet of wallow per hog is considered adequate.

Wallows work best if they are in the sunshine and near a shady area, Whittle explains. "With this arrangement, the hog goes into the wallow and gets wet, then seeks shade where evaporation takes place and has a cooling effect. Wallows should not be in shade, because hogs would want to stay in them continuously and this would make a sanitation problem."

To keep hogs comfortable in buildings, it is recommended that the floor be sprayed occasionally, or the hogs themselves can be sprayed. "This is best done in houses or sheds with concrete floors," Whittle adds.

U. S. Growing The United States is growing at the rate of 2 1/2 million persons a year. To feed these additional persons, the production equivalent of 7 1/2 million acres should be added to farm output each year.

Mrs. Arthur S. Hanby, general chairman of the National Chicken Cooking Contest of the Delmarva Chicken Festival, to be held in Georgetown on June 21, 22 and 23, announced this week that entrance blanks for the contests, both Senior and Junior, are coming in rapidly. The quotas for Delaware and Maryland are almost filled.

A total of 100 entrants to the Senior Cooking Contest is divided by states of the Peninsula and in the nation. There are 25 places each assigned to Delaware, Maryland and Virginia and the remaining 25 are assigned to states outside the Delmarva Peninsula. Should the quotas of the other states not be filled by the deadline for entrance on June 5, the names of applicants received over the Delaware and Maryland quotas will be accepted in the order in which they are received by the committee, of which Mrs. Hanby is chairman.

Contestants have already signed up from New York, Delaware and Maryland with possible entrants listed from a number of other states outside the Peninsula. The contestant is to be furnished with two chickens dressed according to his or her specification. Also furnished will be the flour, salt, pepper and fat for frying. Each contestant will be assigned to a range. There will be 50 ranges, electric and gas, thus permitting 50 contestants to cook chicken at the same time. The Senior division will be divided into 2 shifts and the contest will be staged on the morning of June 23, beginning at 9:00 a. m.

The Junior division has a quota of 50 entrants, divided by states in the identical way the Senior contest is arranged. The Senior contest will be held on Tuesday morning, June 22, beginning at 9:30 a.m. Contestants are required to furnish the committee with a copy of the recipe to be used, in advance of the contest and are also required to bring along their own serving dish, pot holders, etc.

Mrs. Hanby has urged all prospective entrants in the contest to get applications in early, in order to be assured a place in the contest.
