Eisenhower Speech Highlights Opening of Wintherthur

Calling for a greater study of the nation's past as a way to better understanding for the future, President Dwight D. Eisenhower joined Delaware's Governor J. Caleb Boggs Tuesday in urging Americans to take a "new look" at their country's heritage.
The Eisenhower message highlighted exercises at Winterthur Museum, northwest of Wilmington, as it opened its spring season, which includes a tour of the famous Henry Francis duPont azalea gardens. From this week through May 1, early spring flowers, thousands of bulbs, flowering trees and shrubs will be in bloom. From May 3 to May 29 the azaleas will be at their height. The tour is available daily from 1 to 4 p.m. except Mondays.
Assembled for the Patriot's Day observance Tuesday were members of Delaware's 118th General Assembly, state officials, the judiciary, county and city officers.

According to Charles Montgomery, director of Winterthur Museum, the event was planned to rally new interest in the nation's great collections of arts and skills, developed by pioneers as they founded a new nation. The Delaware institution features Americana dating from 1640 to 1840.
At the noon ceremony a new United States flag was presented to the museum by the Department of Delaware, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States. John E. Babiarz, Americanism chairman, and who also served as chief clerk of the House in the General Assembly, made the presentation.
Mr. Babiarz said in part: "It is a real pleasure for me to represent the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States on this occasion and to present for use at Winterthur Museum, this flag of the United States of America."

"Our overseas veterans' organization believes in fostering and preserving American freedom, guaranteed to us through our Declaration of Independence and Federal Constitution. Each year we mark a period near May 1 as Loyalty Day—a day dedicated to a renewal of faith in our American system. It is for that reason that we are proud to see our national emblem flying here. I can assure you that the Veterans of Foreign Wars stand ready to serve Winterthur at any time in furthering appreciation of our national heritage."
Setting the tone for the observance, President Eisenhower extended "best wishes to all engaged in the effort to stimulate interest in the cultural history of America."

The president's message, read by Lamott duPont Copeland, chairman of the Winterthur Board of Directors, continued:
"A knowledge of American ways of living from colonial days to the present in various sections of our nation will surely help our people to a better understanding of themselves and their country in the second half of the 20th century."
Governor Boggs in his address said he believes that "as we acquire a better understanding of the American past, not only Americans, but all others will be spurred to learn more of the courage, determination and devotion to principle which our forebears gave to the building of this nation.
"Towards such a better understanding and clearer concept of our cultural heritage," Governor Boggs continued, "we feel that a revelation is provided through the study of these arts. In our buildings, our tools and manufactures of all kinds we can see the way our people lived. These are proof of the wealth of the American contribution.
"Through continued education, research and restoration," Delaware's chief executive declared, "the great history of our past takes better visual form. Through news reports of these ventures in our national publications, more people are becoming aware of the colorful, determined and progressive builders of a new nation.
"From enforced self-reliance sprang the free and imaginative spirit which was to assert itself over the years. In short, through the whole broad sweep of America's achievement in the arts for living—from the first resourceful make-do to today's unparalleled know-how, we see the growth of American strength and resourcefulness. We as a people have acquired faith in our capabilities from the successful accomplishment of these things."
Music for the occasion came from the United States Naval Training Center Band, Bainbridge, Md., and a guard of honor from Diamond State Post rifle drill team, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Richardson Park, assisted in the flag-raising ceremonies.
