

Hockessin Man Endorsed To Head Fire School

With the Kent delegation dissenting, the Delaware Volunteer Firemen's Association Saturday endorsed a Hockessin man to head the state fire school.

The school is to be built with funds appropriated this year by the General Assembly.

The association's Fire School Advisory Board received five applications and recommended Louis J. Amabili to the State Fire Prevention Commission, which will name the head of the school, probably next month.

Amabili is immediate past president of the state fire chiefs' organization.

A resolution adopted by the volunteers at their 44th annual convention — which ended here Saturday — but the group's 6,500 members and 50 companies in the position of giving "unanimous and unequivocal endorsement to the recommendations presented to the State Fire Prevention Commission".

The vote, however, was not unanimous. Kent County delegates opposed it, saying they do not oppose Amabili but rather the manner in which the advisory board selected him. They said that the applicants were not individually interviewed, and they called for re-opening of the matter with interviews for each applicant.

The view did not prevail, however, and the vote was 64 yes, 30 no and one not voting. The convention did not act to change the wording of the resolution when Kent officials said it should be changed because the vote was not unanimous.

The Kent delegation declined to make the vote unanimous despite a unity plea by the Rev. James Doughten, of Lincoln, chaplain of the association.

The resolution notes that, "under provisions of the laws of the state, the State Fire Prevention Commission shall consult the advisory board on all fire school matters whether administrative or technical and receive recommendations thereon . . ."

One source at the convention, who asked not to be identified, said that some Kent County members wanted William T. James, deputy sheriff and an officer in the Robbins Hose Co., of Dover, to get the post. But others, the source went on to say, felt there were politics involved and would not go along.

There was no open discussion along this line, but Jack T. Roe, Dover fire chief, said on the floor at one point that he felt "there's been nasty rumors and misinformation" about the issue.

Also at the final session, Mr. Doughten installed officers for the new year. They are E. Reynolds Bradley, of Smyrna, president; William T. Lowe, of Lewes, first vice president; E. J. (Manny) Hopkins, of Cranston Heights Co., second vice president; Paul Neeman, of Harrington, secretary, and Elbert C. Bailey, of Laurel, treasurer.

Bradley immediately named Mr. Doughten as chaplain for another term and George Reed Jr. as fire recorder.

The ladies' auxiliary chose Miss Pat Meluney, of Camden-Wyoming as president; Mrs. Emma Short, of Georgetown, first vice president; Mrs. Katherine Jenkins, of Mill Creek, second vice president; Mrs. Mary C. Bennett, of Clayton, secretary, and Miss Charlotte Foskey, of Seaford, treasurer.

Mrs. Margaret Hastings of Blades installed them.

Spare Ambulance, Firemen Told

Delaware's volunteer firemen were advised Friday that, unless an emergency exists, they do not have to provide ambulance service when called.

Atty. Gen. David P. Buckson offered the advice in person during a luncheon at the 44th annual convention of the Delaware Volunteer Firemen's Association. He told them a formal opinion, which they had requested, would be in their hands "in a day or two."

Buckson said each fire company that operates an ambulance should draw up a definition of what it means by "emergency" and then make it generally known to residents of the community and contributors.

"After doing that," he said, "I would advise you to always respond to emergency call, but do not believe the law compels you, even though some of your funds come from the state and county, to provide the service for those cases which are not of an emergency nature."

Buckson said later that volunteer firemen have to take time off from work to handle ambulance calls and that it is not fair for them to sacrifice the time for people who could have made other arrangements. "You have no responsibility to answer every call," Buckson said.

He added that his ruling does not apply to ambulances maintained by public agencies such as the Levy Court of New Castle County. He said it does not apply necessarily to those operated by veterans organizations because they have not sought his opinion in the matter.

Former U. S. Sen. J. Allen Frear Jr. of Dover, in the main address, proposed that volunteers extend their service and provide from five to 10 well-trained men in each organization who would work in cooperation with police.

As Frear visualized their role, volunteer firemen would serve as observers "who care and watch" and report motor vehicle violations to the State Highway Department, but would not have (Continued on Page 8)

Democrats Lead In State Registrations

Almost 246,000 Delawareans are registered to vote and Democrats are in the lead in registrations in all three counties.

Results of the state-wide registration Saturday were added Monday to previous registration figures to arrive at these totals: 104,795 Democrats, $84,530 Republicans and 56,662 who declined to state a party preference.

According to the departments of elections in each of the three counties, the figures are:

New Castle County — 69,676 Democrats; 59,587 Republicans and 42,581 declines.

Kent County — 12,794 Democrats; 8,055 Republicans; and 6,082 declines.

Sussex County — 22,325 Democrats; 16,888 Republicans; and 7,999 declines.

Election department officials said the figures are not complete, but are the best available. The New Castle County totals will grow slightly—figures for Saturday's registration in a few districts remain to be added. There may also be minor adjustments in all counties because of voters who have transferred out.

Saturday, 2,241 Democrats, 1,426 Republicans and 994 declines were registered.

Preliminary figures in New Castle County, outside Wilmington, where the registered Democrats top Republicans for the first time, show 899 new Democrats, 622 new Republicans and 464 declines.

Downstate, Democrats led Republicans by nearly two-to-one margins in new registrations in both Kent and Sussex Counties.

In Kent, Republicans did considerably better than on the first general registration day in July, when they were outscored nearly three to one. Saturday's totals showed 422 Democrats, 228 Republicans and 207 with not stated party preference.

In Sussex County, the registration produced 639 Democrats, 342 Republicans and 194 "de" (Continued on Page 8)

Jury Indicts Laborer, 61, In Girl's Rape

The Kent County Grand Jury Monday indicted a 61-year-old farm laborer on a rape charge.

Junior Jackson, who worked at the Lester Bergold labor camp outside Dover, is accused of raping a 9-year-old girl late last month.

He allegedly took the girl, who also lives at the same camp, to a spot south of the camp to pick wild grapes.

Also indicted Monday on charges of third-degree burglary and grand larceny, was Harry Herman Griffin, 24, of Frederica.

The true bills charge Griffin with entering the house of Allen and Ethel Draper, four miles west of Harrington, last June with intent to commit larceny and of taking clothing and wearing apparel worth over $100 from a parked car in Harrington last December.

Also indicted on a charge that she was involved in the Draper matter was Patsy Ann Morgan Brown, 18, of Frederica.

Mother Attacks Tots, Sips Poison

The wife of an airman attacked her two small children in their home near here Friday night then swallowed poison, state police reported Saturday.

Police said Mrs. Gerda Oshel, 25, stabbed her 22-month-old son, Steven, three times in the chest, in the kitchen of the home about 7 p.m., then attacked 6-year-old life Oshel asleep in bed, with a hammer.

Police said the mother used a claw hammer to rake over the girl's chest. The girl did not require hospitalization and the baby's condition was listed good Saturday at the Dover Air Force Base Hospital.

According to police, Mrs. Oshel attempted to take her own life by swallowing 10 ounces of a plant growing food. Later she called the Harrington ambulance headquarters for assistance.

The mother and both children were taken to the base hospital. Mrs. Oshel was treated for the poisoning and then removed to another section of the hospital police said.

The husband and father, A.I.C. Donald Oshel, stationed at the base, was not at home at the time.

A citizens meeting will be held at 8 p.m. tonight in the fire hall to hear facts about a referendum to float a bond issue for funds to improve the City's water system.

Action taken at the meeting will not be binding. The next move will be the publication of a resolution calling for the referendum.

A citizens meeting, on the same issue, was held June 19. The resolution, calling for that meeting, was improperly drawn, however; hence a new one had to be drawn and this one called for tonight's meeting.

Part of the work to be covered in the referendum is nearing completion. This is the installation of a 10-inch main on Delaware Avenue. The City deemed this work had to be done immediately since the State Highway Department is preparing to let bids to improve the avenue and Center Street, both state-maintained roads, and the highway department stipulates the roads are not to be torn up within five years thereafter except in an emergency.

The referendum, which will call for a bond issue of $150,000, will, on passage, result in an overall improvement of water mains and water plant in the community.

Fence Talk

With George Vapaa

Specialists are fine in their own field. One reason they work out new ideas in their specialty is because they do not worry with other kinds of problems.

Dr. Gerald Coe, a geneticist, working on sugar beet breeding at the Beltsville USDA research center, was here to observe some of his new varieties under Delaware conditions. His life long breeding work has been to search for leaf spot resistant strains and crosses of sugar beets.

I led him astray from his specialty with non-disease questions. He thought we first had some manganese deficiencies. But later checking proved the symptoms were due to a lack of phosphorus and potash. Plant food problems are easily corrected today.

By the way, Bob Stevens, our extension horticulturist, is just back from a study tour of California vegetable operations. Growers out there get 28 ton yields of sugar beets yielding 17% sugar. This is about twice the yield we hope for in Delaware.

A single bull on a single day can be bred to 200 cows. Further, a bull may have been dead for five years or more, yet still be breeding cows because of frozen semen from a storage bank.

A bus load of Delaware dairymen spent a day at the Atlantic Breeders Cooperative near Lancaster, Pa. We were surprised to see bulls being stabled in tie stalls much like cows.

Purchase a good ram for your flock of ewes before the breeding season is here. Remember, breeders of good purebred stud rams generally sell their very best rams early in the season.

Nothing does more to increase the type and conformation of lamb crops than using a good, purebred ram.

These factors were found especially important toward making profits: good feeding, good parasite control and good breeding. No matter how capable a manager is, he cannot obtain more out of the lambs than their inherited ability to produce.

The Soil Conservation Service will give technical and financial assistance to 11 watershed projects in nine states covering 534,418 acres of land.

They are located in 18 counties including two in Delaware.

The Delaware project provides for watershed protection, flood prevention and agricultural water management on the Marshyhope Creek Watershed, Delaware and Maryland.

Polluted air containing ozone may cause "hidden" damage to vegetable, according to a U.S. Department of Agriculture scientist.

Dr. Harry A. Henser reports a 10-per cent growth retardation in tobacco plants exposed to polluted air containing ozone.

Ozone is a high energy form of oxygen that can be formed by action of sunlight on automotive exhausts and certain other sources of air pollution.

The Beltsville scientists used tobacco in the tests because some tobacco varieties are very sensitive to ozone. Tests using other plants are being conducted in California and elsewhere.

Hens fed a tranquilizer may have been happier but they didn't lay as many eggs as hens that didn't get the tranquilizer. In tests conducted by New Mexico State University Agricultural Experiment Station, the tranquilizer, reserpine, was used at two levels—one quarter milligram and one-half milligram per pound of feed.

Changes in the method of electing county Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation committees and in the length of their term of office have been announced by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. The legislation authorizing the changes was recently approved by Congress and was signed by President Johnson August 31.

Free stall housing offers dairymen some excellent advantages. Most of the people interviewed in a Cornell university study were enthusiastic about their free stall arrangement. They reported that it saved a considerable amount of bedding and resulted in cleaner cows.

farmers also found that skimping on the construction of stalls resulted in very short stall life.

Old time steam buffs speak proudly of the power of their antique engines. My good friend, Eddie Evans, of Cheswold, had a cedar stump to pull out of hard dry ground. Two large tractors, each capable of pulling four bottom plows, could not budge it.

So Eddie fastened one end of a steel cable to the stump, and the other end to the big steam engine which had been used years ago for grain threshing. He said for a time the stump and steam engine had a kind of tug-of-war. The stump would rock back the steam engine at the end of each cycle. Finally the stump split, and each half was drawn out separately.

Eddie has a hobby of searching out and then refitting old farm tractors. He likes to try them out from time to time. His wheat threshings each year have become novel events in the Dover area.

Some of us think that a farmers' museum might be set up at the Delaware State Fair. The old machinery and the ancient crafts could be demonstrated during Fair Week. Can we build support for this?

Interest in Ponds has boomed in Kent County during the last three years. Our dry summers have helped farmers to decide to dig them. Fred Mott, our SCS technician tells us that 170 ponds have been dug in recent years. There were 23 dug in the past year. Some 114 are stocked with fish.

Which reminds me. "Clear Track Ahead" Cliff Miller, of Paradise Alley, near Harrington catches fish on call. Last week we had a tour group of 30 farmer committee members looking at conservation practices. Cliff, a retired railroad signals supervisor, brings out a fishing pole and in a matter of minutes hauls out a fine speckled trout from his backyard pond.

Our State Game and Fish Commission should be commended for the excellent way they have set up the Coursey's Pond recreation area. There are numerous trash barrels and picnic benches. And the whole place is kept clean and hazard free.

Green thumber Ed Ralph, our Sussex County associate, says the most important treatment a crop could get this year was water. The lack of water has greatly cut the corn yields of our demonstration plots at the James L. Mitchell farm near Smyrna and at the Georgetown Substation.

Mr. Mitchell said he thought we might forget taking yields this year. But of course our main interest is in spotting differences between hybrids, and between the various rates of fertilizer used. We and the farmer much prefer taking yields at the end of a good growing year. But it's also good to learn which treatments work best in a dry year.

Yours truly fills in as acting home economics extension agent every couple of years. Most of our women folk realize that Mrs. Katie Whiteoak resigned in August to become a full time homemaker northwest of Wilmington.

Luckily, our county office staff is a well knit group. So the problems which arise can get attention from other agents or the secretaries.

We've hit a good problem that that involves all of our Home Economics club members. The 1964-65 program booklets have two printing errors caused by scrambled lines of type. Members can correct their copies by writing October 1964 on Page 3, just above 21, 28, and then again on page 4 just above 27. We hope it doesn't cause too much confusion.

Mark Oct. 20 on your calendar. That's the date for our Kent County Homemakers Day. More details to members by mail as they are firmed up.

Changes in the method of electing county Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation committees and in the length of their term of office have been announced by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. The legislation authorizing the changes was recently approved by Congress and was signed by President Johnson August 31.

Under the new bill, three major changes relating to election of ASC county committees were authorized. These changes: (1) Establish a three-year staggered term of office for county committeemen instead of the existing one-year term; (2) provide that a county committeeman may not serve more than three consecutive terms. Previously there was no limitation on the number of terms committeemen could serve; (3) Provide for the election of county committeemen by all community committeemen at the county convention rather than by the chairmen of each community committee in the county.

Searing summer drouth has burned crops and pastures over half of the most productive areas of the United States. The biggest roasted region is the Central and Southern Great Plains, extending from the Mississippi River westward to the Rocky Mountains. Hard hit, too, are eastern South Dakota, central and southern Minnesota, the northern edge of Iowa, and most of Wisconsin and Michigan. Also in the stricken area are southern Illinois, much of Kentucky, Tennessee and Ohio and all of the eastern states except Maine.

The 1965 wheat program has several new provisions that Kent County wheat farmers may want to analyze.

Under one new provision, farmers signing up for both the wheat and feed grain programs may substitute wheat for feed grains or feed grains for wheat. Wheat farmers who grow oats or rye may request that an oats-rye base be established for their farms. They may then plant wheat in place of oats or rye, or plant oats or rye on wheat or feed grain acreage.

Another change allows wheat farmers who sign up for the program to overplant their 1965 wheat allotment by as much as 50 per cent and store excess production under bond. By storing the excess wheat under bond and fulfilling other program provisions, they will be eligible for marketing certificates and price-support loans.

Overplanting a wheat allotment for 1965 will not affect wheat acreage history in determining future allotment.

Under the 1965 program domestic marketing certificates will be valued at 75 cents a bushel, and export certificates at 30 cents. The certificates were worth 70 cents and 30 cents in 1964. Domestic certificates will be issued on a maximum of 45 per cent of a farm's normal production, and export certificates on 35 per cent. In the 1964 program, the maximum number of each kind was based on 45 per cent of normal production.

Provisions for diverting wheat land to conservation uses are similar to those in the 1964 program. The payment rate for voluntary diverting land will be higher in 1965. But no diversion payment will be made for applying conservation use to the minimum qualifying acreage.

Further information on these changes and other program provisions is available from the county A.S.C. office on the dual highway south of Dover. The sign-up period will extend through Oct. 2 at the county ASC office.

Grain Futures May Be Alternative To On-Farm Storage

The grain futures market is an area most farmers have been content to leave to the highly trained speculators and the flamboyant artists. Their fears are pretty much unwarranted according to W. T. McAllister, farm management specialist at the University of Delaware. He feels that grain futures offer producers the advantages of storing grain without the problem of large capital investments for permanent buildings, and without the worry of grain going out of condition while it is in farm storage.

The future market is made up of people who have grain to sell (including farmers, grain dealers, and co-ops), and people who buy large quantities of grain—feed manufacturers, food processors, and exporters. They need large amounts of grain at a price they can determine in advance. They are called "hedgers" because they minimize their gains and losses through price change by purchasing and selling contracts for future delivery of the crop.

McAllister gives this example of how the future market might work for a corn producer. He would sell his corn locally at harvest time, and buy an equal amount through a futures contract. This is done through a broker. Then he would sell this contract later in the marketing year—perhaps about the time he would normally market his corn.

When a person buys a futures contract, he guarantees to deliver a given quantity of grain at a specific time and place. Delivery is seldom made according to the economist. An offsetting futures contract is made instead, and the buy-sell transaction is complete.

Here is an example of how the transaction works: A farmer harvests 17,200 bushels of corn at 25.5 moisture. Rather than store, he sells direct from the field, takes a 30 cent discount because of the moisture content, and receives 80 cents a bushel or a total of $13,760. On October 15 he buys three futures contracts of 5,000 bushels each for July delivery. The July futures price is $1.25 a bushel. The purchases are made depositing the required margin—usually 10 cents a bushel, or a total of $1,500 with a broker. He also pays a $22 commission for each contract—an additional $66. The difference between $13,760 and ($12,194) can be deposited at four per cent interest or it can be used to pay off debts which may be costing him interest.

By the first of June the quoted price on July corn futures is $1.26 1/2 and the farmer decides to close-out his future contracts. He does this by contacting his broker who closes the account by making an offsetting futures contract sale for July at $1.26 1/2. In this example the farmer would have gained $494—the difference between the purchase price of $13,750 plus a $66 commission, and the selling price of $18,975 plus interest on the net after the futures purchases. Add to this the cost of building and operating farm storage, and McAllister says you arrive at a substantial reason for a keen interest in the futures market.

Farm Tours Open To School Children

The University of Delaware is again inviting the school children of New Castle County to visit its experimental farm in Newark. More than 25,000 children have visited the farm since these tours started in 1957. The farm, located on South College Avenue, is a complete working farm of over 600 acres. In addition to vegetable and field crops research plots, there is an extensive dairy operation, poultry buildings, a large orchard and a beef herd.

Edward H. Schabinger, New Castle County agent, who is in charge of tour arrangements, says school classes and kindergartens can visit the farm between Oct. 1 and 30. They will see cows, chickens, ducks and other barnyard fowl, pigs, sheep and farm machinery.

Guided tours will be conducted Monday through Friday during the month-long "open house." Each tour will last about an hour and will include stops to see a cow being milked, silage being prepared and farm animals being fed. Visitors will also see the University's cow milking parlor where modern techniques of milk production are practiced.

Each youngster who visits the farm receives a special coloring book about the University farm. Schabinger says the books help the children learn more about the farm and how it operates.

Teachers who would like to visit should call the agricultural extension service at 368-0611, extension 426, as soon as possible. Schabinger says several groups had to be turned down last year because their leaders called after the schedule was filled. More than 5,000 children visited the farm last year, the agent says. Tours start every hour beginning at 10. Groups should be no larger than 40.

Broiler Housing Seminar Oct. 1

More than 200 poultrymen from throughout the nation are expected to attend the third annual Broiler Housing Seminar Oct. 1, at the University of Delaware's Georgetown agricultural substation.

Poultry industry leaders and scientists from five states will discuss new developments in poultry housing, with emphasis on research in controlled environment, according to Ray Lloyd, associate extension poultryman at the substation.

Lloyd will open the program with a report on a survey comparing improved environmental housing with conventional housing on the Delmarva Peninsula. Frank D'Armi, University of Delaware poultry researcher, will discuss the University's windowless broiler house which has been in use for a year.

Ernest W. Walpole, extension agricultural engineer at the University, will explain new recommendations for broiler house ventilation. A year's study of housing ventilation has shown that broilers can be raised with less air circulation and lower temperatures than previously thought necessary. Use of the new recommendations should lower electricity and fuel costs, Walpole says.

Dr. Andrew Nalbandov, an endocrinologist and professor of animal genetics at the University of Illinois, will discuss some of the physiological and behavioral changes in chickens raised under the low light intensity of the windowless houses. Because birds grown under these conditions are less active and do not have red combs, buyers have paid less for them than for broilers grown in conventional houses, even though low light intensity produces better birds, Lloyd says.

Others on the seminar program include Paul N. Winn, associate professor of agricultural engineering at the University of Maryland, who will discuss research in temperature and humidity of broiler housing; Norman D. Augsbarger, vice president of Acme Engineering and Manufacturing Co., Muskogee, Okla., who will discuss aerodynamics of broiler house ventilation; and R. M. Ritchie, agricultural engineer at the University of North Carolina, discussing ways of modernizing existing broiler houses.

A panel discussion on improved environmental houses will feature four poultrymen outlining their experiences with these new houses. Included will be Tom Whittington, Whittington Poultry Farm, Marion, Md.; Stokes Homan, Otis Feed Co., Parsonsburg, Md.; Bill Russell, Bayshore Foods, Easton, and Stanley Street, Cohn & Bock Co., Princess Anne, Md.

Poultrymen who plan to attend the seminar must register by Sept. 24. Poultry industry leaders from 21 states attended the event last year.

The Broiler Housing Seminar is sponsored jointly by the Agricultural Extension Services of Delaware, Maryland and Virginia, The Delaware Poultry Improvement Association and Delmarva Poultry Industry, Inc.

What Should Her Title Be?

A beautiful girl is chosen each year at the Delmarva Chicken Festival to reign over the Festival and represent the Delmarva Poultry Industry at various functions throughout the year. In the past she has been called "Miss Delmarva", but she needs a title what will automatically indicate her affiliation with the poultry industry on Delmarva Peninsula and the product that is promoted as delmarvalous broiler-fryer chicken.

A prize is being offered for the best suggestion for a new title—a week's lodging for two people at the Atlantic Sands Motel, Rehoboth Beach, any time before June 12, 1965.

Please send your suggestions to Delmarva Poultry Industry, Inc., R. D. 2, Box 47, Georgetown, no later than September 25. Winner will be notified before Oct. 1.

Caution Urged When Going Back to School

Please watch out for impetuous young Bobby — it's "back to school" time and that means it's time to start permanent use of the utmost caution wherever there are children.

This request was made this week by Mrs. William N. Cann, vice president for home safety, of the Delaware Safety Council. She explained that "impetuous young Bobby" is an imaginary six-year-old mentioned in a letter to drivers urging back-to-school safety. The letter was originally issued by U. S. Felty, director of the Ohio Department of Highway Safety. Mrs. Cann said it "expresses with originality what every driver needs to remember at this time of year."

The letter and its accompanying message follows: "Dear Driver:

"You don't know my impetuous young Bobby who is just six years old and will start his first year of school in a few days. You haven't been privileged to see how he can turn suddenly from eager enthusiasm to solemn unconcern to youthful wisdom. No, you couldn't know him or love him as I do—that's why it seems strange that I will soon have to trust his very life to you. "Yes, to you—because in a short while he will march off to school regularly. He'll be crossing streets, playing along the way and around the school. I hoped I was preparing him when I threw in some free advice about the safe way to do these things—in answering his questions about all the wonders of the first grade. But this is pretty new to him and he may make mistakes. Bobby isn't irresponsible, yet he is not responsible. For him, the crushing dangers of traffic are not real. I can tell him, but it would be like describing the Giant in the story of Jack and the Beanstalk.

"But you know, and you can watch out for him. You can watch for him as he plays on the way home from school and you could use caution when you see him ready to cross the street. You are ready to stop if he should dash out from behind a parked car or follow a rolling ball into your path. If you remember how dear he is to me, you will drive slowly through every school zone. "Since you have been granted the privilege to drive, I have to assume that you will do these things. But will you? Will you drive carefully wherever there are children, not only because it is your legal responsibility, but because you care as much as I do that the frightening roar of traffic death—of the Giant—never becomes real for a little fellow who has so much ahead of him to learn?"

"Sincerely yours, "FATHER" "No, this is not my son—my family is now grown—but it could be yours. And if you are a driver, Bobby could be any child you meet, boy or girl. Whatever you and your family choose to imagine further, remember these facts: "It's "Back-to-school" time, and if you drive, it's time to start permanent use of the utmost caution wherever there are children."

RELICS — When contractors were connecting a new Delaware Avenue water main with one at Clark Street last Friday night, they unearthed remains of a branch railroad. This road was the Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia, and pursued, roughly, the route of the present branch road. In the picture are shown two railroad ties, running from east to west, and a granite catch basin. The railroad went to the back of the site of the present station. The street, running from the back of the station to Clark Street, was known as Felton Avenue. This section, today, is part of Delaware Avenue. Shown in the picture is also the 10-inch concrete tile of the new water main. The roundhouse for the branch road was back of Ward Street. The main line was the P.B.&W. and had its roundhouse south of Liberty Street. These facts are brought out by a lithograph in the City Hall office—Price photo.

OHA To Advertise North-South Highway

An expanded "program for Progress" to advertise and improve the north-south Ocean Highway will be adopted this month by the Ocean Hiway Association, it was announced Friday by Vernon Derrickson, of Dover, chairman of the Board of Directors.

A survey is now being conducted among all Ocean Hiway Association members and community leaders along the Ocean Highway between New York and Florida to obtain recommendations and help determine priority programs for the promotion and development of the route.

"More than 300 persons have already responded to the survey", Derrickson said. "We are very pleased with the many valuable recommendations and constructive ideas that have been submitted."

Community leaders and other interested citizens are invited to help develop the Ocean Hiway's new "Program for Progress." Survey forms may be obtained from or recommendations sent directly to the Ocean Hiway Association Executive Office at P. O. Box 167; Virginia Beach, Va., or the Association's Information Bureau at Box 1552; Wilmington, Del.

Delmarva Poultry Transportation Committee Active

"The recently announced Eastern Railroads' reduced mileage scale of rates on shipments of corn from the Mid-west to the Northeast is good news to members of the Delmarva Poultry Industry Association", said Mel Fell, chairman of DPT's Transportation Committee, in commenting about the continual year-round efforts of his committee to seek lower freight rates on corn and feed ingredients moving to the Shore.

One of the distinct advantages of this recent rate reduction is the enlarged territory for originating shipments of corn out of the Mid-west to Delmarva. All shipments out of Ohio, Indiana and Michigan are now eligible for the reduced rates. "This will reduce the premium paid for corn shipped from the grain belt of our nation and may well lead to future reductions in the freight rates on other feed ingredients", continued Mr. Fell as he discussed the importance of lower feed ingredient costs in producing Delmarva's approximately 250-million broilers in 1964. "After all", said Chairman Fell, "every cent reduction in the freight rate per bushel of corn means approximately $1.00 lower production cost per 1000 broilers and, with today's cost-selling price situation, it's the cent per bushel and the dollar per thousand broilers that can keep our poultry industry here on Delmarva competitive with the major broiler growing areas of the country."

What Is Cancer?

Cancer is a frightening word among Americans today. It's a frightening disease. Millions of American families have had experience with cancer. Millions of words have been written about cancer in the public press. Most of us know something about cancer. But how many of us really know what cancer is? During the process of cell division—the basis of normal body growth and repair—cells become differentiated into the specific kinds needed for each organ or body function, says a new pamphlet of the American Medical Association.

Each kind of cell divides into its own kind, equipped to do the job it was designed to do. Under certain conditions not yet completely understood, some cells do not differentiate in this way. They multiply in irregular and disorderly fashion and compete with normal cells for nutrition and space. These cell masses are called tumors.

Tumors that remain localized are benign and may not be troublesome unless they mechanically interfere with some body function. Tumors that grow rapidly and spread or destroy tissue are known as malignant tumors. Collectively, these are called cancer.

Unrestrained growth of cancer cells will infiltrate vital organs and destroy the individual if not checked. Slow growing cancers may take months to spread beyond control. More malignant types spread so rapidly that they become incurable in a few weeks.

Surgical removal of the cancer and destruction of the tumor with some form of radiation are the primary methods of treatment. A few types of malignancy, particularly leukemia, react quite well to newly discovered drugs and chemicals. Drug treatment holds much hope, but it is not yet perfected and surgery and radiation are still the major treatments, possibly supplemented by carefully selected drugs.

If treated promptly and properly, some cancers are highly curable. One-third of all cancers in the United States are being cured today and more than one million Americans alive today have been cured of cancers. However, almost 300,000 Americans will die of cancer this year. Of this total, almost 100,000 might have been saved through early detection and treatment.

The cause of cancer in man is not known. Some cancers may follow some form of physical irritation, such as friction, heat, sunlight, x-rays, and other forms of radiation. Chemical irritants may include infections, tars, certain of the heavy metals, hormones and certain dyes. There is no evidence that heredity is a factor.

Know and heed the American Cancer Society's Seven Danger Signals:

- 1. Unusual bleeding or discharge. 2. A lump or thickening in the breast or elsewhere. 3. A sore that does not heal. 4. Change in bowel or bladder habits. 5. Hoarseness or cough. 6. Indigestion or difficulty in swallowing. 7. Change in a wart or mole.

If any one of these symptoms persists for longer than two weeks, see your doctor. These symptoms do not necessarily mean you have cancer, but they are a warning sign that it might be fatal to ignore.

Gold Leaf Used To Patch Blood Vessels

Gold leaf has been used successfully to patch punctured blood vessels and defects in other body tissues, including the brain, Drs. John P. Gallagher and Charles F. Geschickter, Washington, D. C., reported recently.

Gold leaf "displays a unique ability to adhere closely to most of the body tissues including bone" when it is electrically charged, a technique used for centuries by guilders, the Georgetown University researchers wrote in the current (Sept. 21) Journal of the American Medical Association.

It acts like a patch when placed over a tear in a blood vessel, on a bleeding capillary surface, or on an opening in a membrane, they explained. This allows normal healing which renders the seal permanent, they added.

In 10 patients, charged gold leaf was used to stop bleeding from arteries and veins on the dura mater, which is the outer membrane of the brain, the cerebral and cerebellar cortex, and the surface of the spinal cord, according to the report. It also was used to control bleeding from soft tissues such as muscle.

"It was found to be ideal for sealing small holes in the dura mater and as a protective cover for sutured incisions in this membrane," the authors said.

None of the patients displayed any evidence of adverse reaction to the gold implants and in all cases the wounds healed, they reported.

For generations the permanent arrest of hemorrhage from arteries and veins as well as from oozing capillary beds has been a serious problem for surgeons, the authors commented. Tying off large blood vessels to control bleeding is often not feasible. Other methods of controlling hemorrhage depend on the formation of a blood clot which may block the blood vessel completely.

The gold leaf patch does not rely on the formation of a clot, and animal studies showed application of the gold patch to a wounded vessel does not reduce circulation, the researchers stressed.

The gold leaf is electrically charged merely by stroking a camel hair brush against a rubber comb and touching the leaf to the positively charged brush. The leaf adheres to the brush until it is touched to living tissue. In view of this, living tissue apparently has a negative charge, the authors said.

Under normal laboratory conditions, foil uses an electrostatic charge in a matter of a few minutes, the authors pointed out. However, they said, animal experiments proved there was prolonged electrical attraction between tissues and gold leaf.

The same principal has been used for centuries by guilders who draw a brush over their hair until it is charged sufficiently to pick up the gold leaf they wish to apply, according to the Journal article.

Gold leaf is made by the time honored method of beating sheets of pure gold with a wooden mallet. Microscopic examination revealed that gold leaf is composed of stratified layers of metal. It is about 1/200,000ths of an inch thick, consisting of 98 per cent gold and 2 per cent alloy, added as a hardener.

It is the most malleable of all metals and blends into depressions and irregular surfaces with ease, the authors stressed, even when beaten into thin sheets, it still retains its tensile strength.

Unlike silver and tin elemental gold is chemically inert and appears to be ideal for use in human tissues.

For surgical purposes, gold leaf should be two or three times as thick as the leaf now available, the authors added. Commercial leaf contains minute holes, which are apparently thinned areas due to excessive beating. A thicker leaf can be obtained simply by stopping the goldbeating process at an earlier stage.

Electrically charged gold leaf also clings to the skin for a number of days if the site is protected with a covering, the authors added.

Although gold salts and gold plate have been used previously for therapeutic purposes, no references to the use of charged leaf or foil in surgery or medicine could be found in the medical literature, they said.

"Eleutherian Mills" Open To Public September 22 To October 18.

"Eleutherian Mills", the residence built by E. I. duPont in 1803 overlooking his powder mills on the Brandywine, will be open to the public from Sept. 22 to Oct. 18. The restored first office of the DuPont Company, adjacent to the house, will be open during the same period. The buildings were open to the public this spring May 12 to June 7 and 10,000 persons visited the properties.

The historic home was deeded to the Eleutherian Mills-Hagley Foundation by its owner Mrs. Francis B. Crowninshield in 1952 at the 150th anniversary of the establishment of the duPont Company. It will be shown furnished as it was in her lifetime, reflecting the tastes and interests of five generations of the duPont family who have resided there.

The center section of the present structure was the original residence, which contained E. I. duPont's office. In the 1850's his son, General Henry duPont constructed the matching stone wings which exist today.

James P. Connor, contact officer of the VA Regional Office, Wilmington, is the only living Delaware Medal of Honor winner.

William Melville, Department Commander of the American Legion of Delaware, will head the delegation from Delaware to the 46th National Convention to be held in Dallas, Tex., starting Sept. 20 to Sept. 24.

Edward T. Campbell, a member of the National Employment Committee; George F. Foster, a member of the National Civil Defense Committee; George Ehinger, a national director of the Child Welfare Foundation; Dr. Carl J. Rees, a member of the National Foreign Relations Committee and Dr. Park W. Huntington, a member of the National Graves Registration and Memorial Committee, will attend committee meetings Fri., Sept. 18, and Sat., Sept. 19.

The following are delegates to the convention — Raymond Trabold, William J. B. Regan, Florence Cuyck, Michael Cuyck, Charles E. Jackson.

Veterans News

Holders of the Congressional Medal of Honor are now eligible for full medical and hospital care in the Veterans Administration Hospitals, according to Leon Fields, manager of the VA Regional Office, Wilmington.

This benefit followed the action of President Johnson in signing the bill passed by Congress to authorize such care, regardless of whether the disability for which such care is sought was due to wartime or peacetime service.

Those Medal of Honor winners, who performed their qualifying acts of heroism during wartime, are also entitled to a payment of $100 a month if they are age 50 or older.

A bill to award the same payment to those whose acts of heroism were performed during peacetime is now being considered by the Congress.

The most recent records show that there are 284 Medal of Honor winners living. Mr. Fields said.

James P. Connor, contact officer of the VA Regional Office, Wilmington, is the only living Delaware Medal of Honor winner.

Home Freezing Rules Easy to Follow Nutritionists Says

If any one time of year could be considered a 'home freezing season,' it is probably summertime with its abundance of garden-fresh vegetables.

Miss Coblentz says she is most frequently asked whether it is really necessary to blanch or slightly pre-cook all vegetables before freezing them.

The usual method of blanching is to place vegetables in boiling water for a few minutes, then cool quickly in ice water and drain thoroughly before packing in freezer containers.

Miss Coblentz says some homemakers object to blanching corn on the cob in the belief that it makes the cob soggy; however, blanching is improved with blanching.

Once you are inside, you may remove gloves if you wish, except at formal dances, receptions, or dinners.

Women should not remove gloves to shake hands, but it is considered proper for a man to remove the glove from his right hand before shaking hands with a woman, if he can do so naturally and easily.

Miss Reed explains that our method of designating glove length by a number of buttons comes from France and is handed down from a time when gloves were fastened with buttons one inch apart.

Another misconception many homemakers have is that tomatoes may not be frozen, Miss Coblentz says. It is true that whole raw tomatoes cannot be frozen satisfactorily for such uses as salads, but stewed tomatoes and tomato juice can be frozen quite successfully.

Uncooked tomato pulp may also be frozen, but it can be stored only a few months without flavor loss.

For longer storage, she recommends cooking peeled, quartered tomatoes for 10 to 20 minutes. Then place the pan of tomatoes in cold water to cool. Pack in containers, allowing the recommended head space, seal and freeze.

Small cubes of the meaty part of fresh tomatoes can be frozen for use as salad garnishes, but they should be served while still frozen, since complete thawing will give a soft, mushy product.

Green tomato slices should be dipped in cornmeal before freezing, Miss Coblentz says. To serve, pan fry or deep fry without thawing.

Another problem of concern to many homemakers is the length of time food can be kept frozen beyond the recommended period.

Miss Coblentz says if the food is kept solidly frozen at below-zero temperatures, it will not spoil, but it may not maintain the best possible flavor and texture.

"Keeping food too long in the freezer gives it greater opportunity for drying out, especially in a poor quality wrapping paper or packaging material," Miss Coblentz says.

"Furthermore, it is good discipline and management to rotate the food in your freezer, using it in a 'checking account' rather than a 'savings account'."

Additional information on home freezing may be found in a "Chart for Freezing Fruits and Vegetables," available free from the Department of Rural Communications, University of Delaware, Newark, Delaware.

Few Simple Rules Guide Glove Etiquette

Gloves are a small part of a woman's wardrobe, but there are probably more questions about the etiquette and appropriateness of gloves than about any other item she wears, notes Miss Janet Reed, extension clothing and textiles specialist at the University of Delaware.

"No doubt this can be traced to the long history of gloves when they have been associated with authority, prestige, wealth, honor and fashion," Miss Reed says.

"Some of these notions have prevailed in somewhat modified form to the present day. Why else would a woman wear gloves on a hot summer day?"

Gloves have become important fashion accessories that help to complete the picture of a well-dressed woman. As with any other item of wearing apparel, fashion will change what is popular and considered correct.

Today there are many informal occasions when gloves are not needed. But authorities say that gloves should always be worn on the streets of a large city or town; at ceremonies such as weddings and funerals; going to and from church; attending formal luncheons, dinners, teas, receptions, dances, opera, the theater, concerts and similar affairs.

Once you are inside, you may remove gloves if you wish, except at formal dances, receptions, or dinners. Then the gloves are kept on until you wish to eat or powder your nose.

Women should not remove gloves to shake hands, but it is considered proper for a man to remove the glove from his right hand before shaking hands with a woman, if he can do so naturally and easily.

Miss Reed explains that our method of designating glove length by a number of buttons comes from France and is handed down from a time when gloves were fastened with buttons one inch apart.

Today the term refers to a measurement of length starting from the base of the thumb. For example, a six-button glove measures six inches from the base of the thumb.

Popular glove lengths include the shortie or wrist length glove, the four-button or bracelet length, the eight-button which comes to mid-arm, the 10-button "crush" or below-elbow glove, the 12-button elbow length, the 16-button opera length which comes to the middle of the upper arm and the 20-button shoulder length glove.

For very formal occasions when you wear a long, bare-armed gown, the shoulder length or opera length is correct.

For other occasions there is no hard and fast rule, Miss Reed says. It becomes a matter of what looks well with the sleeve length and your own figure proportions. One guide for suits and coats is to have the glove meet the sleeve.

For example, she says, if you are wearing an elbow length sleeve, wear an elbow length glove. However, if you have pretty arms and elbows, a wrist or bracelet length glove may be worn.

Color contrasts and figure proportions will play a part, too, Miss Reed notes. The petite woman wearing contrasting color long gloves can appear "glove heavy" in the elbow length sleeve costume. Sleeveless summer dresses may be best balanced with a shorty glove.

She says the best way to judge correctness is to develop your own sense of proportion. Try on the outfit in question with different glove lengths and "squint" at yourself in a full length mirror. The glove becomes a part of the whole costume, and the whole costume should always be considered in relation to the woman who wears it.

Black, white, gray, beige and brown are neutral enough in color to be acceptable on almost all occasions. White gloves are considered somewhat more formal. Many well-dressed women feel colored gloves are not in the best of taste. Miss Reed points out that colored gloves can call attention to your hands and should be used with discretion. If they are used, they may be selected to blend with the costume color by the use of a subtle shade of the same color but never matched perfectly; or to contrast sharply. If the color contrast is great, care should be taken in the length of glove used. Sometimes the contrasting color is repeated in another part of the costume, and it may be more interesting if the colors do not match exactly, she notes.

Judgment in proportion, color and value contrasts and the effect you want to achieve will help you decide on the most becoming and tasteful selection, Miss Reed says.

Disposition of Polio Receipts

The Medical Society of Delaware has announced final disposition of funds from its 1963-64 campaign to immunize Delawareans against polio. Dr. Floyd I. Hudson, out-going president of the society, said the doctors considered the campaign successful, with about 209,000 doses of the oral polio vaccine distributed on four Sundays and in make-up sessions. The full course for one person was one dose each of three types of vaccine, but the society had no way of knowing how many individuals participated.

The medical society assumed full financial responsibility for the program, but asked for twenty-five cent donations from those who could afford it, since it did not have funds to cover the expenses. Public donations totalled $45,785.56. Sales of smaller quantities of vaccine to the State Board of Health of use in follow-up programs brought in an additional $3,570, for total receipts of $49,355.56.

The society spent $20,556.60 for clinic supplies, of which $19,462.45 was for vaccine. $4,647.88 was spent for paid advertising and sound tapes. $4,341.79 went to cover the cost of services, travel within the state, and other necessary expense. No person who worked in the clinics was paid. The excess of receipts over expenses was $19,809.34.

"We felt," said Dr. Hudson, "that the money belonged to the people who gave it, that most of them regarded polio as a child's disease, and that the excess should in some way benefit the children of the state. We also felt that the disposition should give appropriate recognition to the organizations whose members manned the clinics on a volunteer basis—the Delaware Pharmaceutical Society, the Delaware Chapters of the National Foundation, the Delaware Red Cross, the Woman's Auxiliary to the Medical Society of Delaware, and the Medical Society."

A grant of $15,000 has been given to the Child Diagnostic and Development Center of Delaware, Inc. The Center, to open in Wilmington in 1965, will offer physical and psychological screening to Delaware children who need it, with fees based on the ability of parents to pay.

A check for $1000 has been given the Delaware State Pharmaceutical Society, to be used as scholarship aid for a Delaware student studying pharmacy. The Pharmaceutical Society will select the recipient.

One thousand dollars has been given to the Woman's Auxiliary of the Medical Society to be used for nursing scholarships for Delaware students. The Auxiliary, which is active in nurses' scholarship work, will select the recipient.

One thousand dollars has been set aside for the scholarship program of the medical society, which already has an active program of giving scholarships to medical students from Delaware, financed by contributions from members.

The remaining funds are being used to purchase ultra-sound and paraffin bath equipment for the Delaware Curative Workshop, as a gift from the Delaware Red Cross and the Delaware Chapters of the National Foundation. This will be used in the correction of body damage similar to that sometimes caused by polio.

Martin Golden, president of the Pharmaceutical Society and Mrs. James T. Metzger, outgoing president of the Society's auxiliary, accepted checks for their organizations at the annual banquet of the Medical Society Friday night, Sept. 11.

"We feel that the whole program was very worthwhile," said Dr. Hudson. "Tens of thousands of individuals benefited by it, as did the community as a whole. We are extremely grateful to the organizations that helped in the campaign, and to the communications media, press, radio, television and billboard advertisers, who contributed enormously to the success of the project."

Delaware Food Market Report

Fast moving autumn days call for hearty menus and beef can fill the bill. Supplies remain abundant, so why not serve beef for breakfast, lunch, dinner, or even for a late Saturday or Sunday night supper.

Beef continues to be a featured meat each week at most markets. United States production this year has been forecast at over 18 billion pounds, about 10% above a year ago. Due to this ample supply, consumers are likely to eat about 100 pounds each, 5 to 6 pounds more than they averaged last year.

Remember all cuts of beef rank about the same in nutritional value, fat for fat, and lean for lean, so you can "eat well" with cuts that are less expensive. Use the proper cooking methods and a bit of ingenuity and good eating becomes assured.

To lend greater appeal to your beef dishes, be sure to vary the cuts you buy. For instance, if you would enjoy a pot roast you will find many cuts suitable for this purpose. Try a shoulder of chuck blade bone pot roast, a round or shoulder bone pot roast, or the increasingly popular boneless chuck roast which is so easy to carve. The heel of the round, a boneless three-cornered cut from the lower part of the round is excellent for pot roast. Of course, rump roast and brisket roast are good also.

For added variety in your pot roasts, U.S.D.A. home economists suggest you try any of the following variations: Add a split garlic clove to the meat after browning. Remove the garlic before preparing the gravy, and use tomato juice for the cooking liquid - or let bay leaf, thyme, and fresh parsley sprigs impart a subtle herb flavoring. Add these herbs after browning and remove bay leaves before preparing the gravy. Another interesting flavor is created by spreading about half-a-cup of freshly grated horseradish over the browned pot roast, add a bit of water, cover tightly and cook until tender. Of course, what's better than a pot roast cooked with carrots, onions, potatoes, and perhaps a few slivers of green peppers.

Supplies of fryers seem to be on the rise and turkey continues to be abundant, also. Lamb is a feature in some stores as well as baby beef and veal All in all the meat counters are filled with a wide variety at reasonable prices. The fresh vegetables and fruit market looks much as it did last week. Good supplies are available, but due to the weather all over, prices are a bit higher.

Delawareans Contribute to JFK Library

A total of 1280 Delawareans have contributed $5,552 to the Delaware campaign for the John F. Kennedy Library. Robert F. Kelly, state chairman of the library program in Delaware, said that the two largest groups of contributors have been the school children and members of organized labor. Back-yard fairs by various groups of young people have also contributed to the over-all total.

The nation-wide goal set by the trustees of the Library is $10 million; about two-thirds of the amount has now been received. Mr. Kelly met recently with Mrs. John F. Kennedy, former Attorney General Robert Kennedy, President Johnson, and other members of the Kennedy family to discuss the nation-wide solicitation effort. At that time it was pointed out that Delaware is well under expectations as far as its backing of the library program is concerned.

Mr. Kelly again emphasized that all contributions to the library are tax deductible and that persons or organizations contributing to the Library are tax deductible and that persons or organizations contributing $1 or more will have their names permanently recorded at the Library.

Ground-breaking ceremonies for the library are expected to take place early next year and the project will be completed within three years.

Contributions to the Library may be sent to the John F. Kennedy Library, P. O. Box 1001, Wilmington, Del., or to Boston,

Gerry Garey Leads Surge Of New Harriers

History repeated itself at Killen's Pond this week as junior Gerry Garey duplicated a feat of his older brother Kenny, a former star Lion cross-country ace. Kenny tried his hand at several sports in his early years at H.H.S. but was less than sensational each time. As a junior he reluctantly tried cross-country and was an immediate success. At the end of the season he trailed only teammate Clarence Hackett and Easton's swift Jim Harvey among the 150 harriers competing in this area.

Gerry made a couple of tentative trips around the rugged 2.4 miles course recording a fair 15.16. He missed a couple of workouts and dropped two places on the team as a couple of youngsters beat that 15.16. Declaring that he was going to break 15 minutes he boiled out of the sand pit, up "Heartbreak Hill" into the "North Woods" and out again to clock a great 13.28. Back in brother Kenny's time this would have gotten him the No. 2 spot on the squad. But this Lion squad is much stronger than that of three years ago so Gerry for the time being is well down the list. But we wouldn't bet against him because he comes from a family of boys who can all run.

A couple of 11 year old seventh graders demonstrated tremendous strength, courage and determination beyond most kids their age when they were clocked in very fast times. Roger Hicks and Louis Kemp ran the course in 15.04 and 15.57. Imagine what they could be doing for H.H.S. by 1967-68-69 if they stick with the sport. Their performances are probably about equal. Kemp is two months older but Hicks ran the course several times last year while still in the sixth grade. Kemp has a big plus in his favor. He lives right on the Lions cross-country course and can run it any time of the year. All through his elementary days he watched local greats like Harry Knotts, Dwight Hackett, Clarence Hackett, Buddy Bonniwell and the present No. 1 Dennis Rogers charge up the hill in workouts and races against other schools. Small wonder then that he decided to give it a try.

Oscar Matthews III, an eighth grader, is another newcomer with good potential. After only five or six workouts he has an official time of 15.11 and was clocked under 15 minutes running alone on another occasion.

Dennis Rogers, Marshall Hatfield and Ellis Myer are consistently near their best times. Sophomore Dan Hicks set a new low of 13.03 Wednesday night to hold his No. 4 spot.

Donald Wells hit a new low for the fourth time this fall as he hit 13.24. Donald has a three year history of hard work and steady improvement.

Henry Minner and Bob Matthews came back to the fold this week and are starting to log some respectable times. Both have a long way to go however to get back to where they were in 1963.

There are still some notable absentees who have helped the team tremendously in the past and could do so again if they will apply themselves vigorously to the task.

The Lions open at Easton, Thursday afternoon Sept. 24. Harrington has met Easton approximately 10 times in six years. The big Maryland school triumphed on only one occasion. George Bonniwell will miss the meet since he is on National Guard duty for two weeks. Some other key men are out of shape but the Lions expect to win, nevertheless, and run their winning streak to eleven.

Lion Gridders Open at Delmar Tonight

All roads lead to Delmar tonight as Frank Glazier's Lions take on the Delmar Wildcats. Everyone knows a Lion can beat a Wildcat anytime he feels like it. Practically every Henlopen Conference head coach is singing the blues this fall and their stories are almost identical. Each one admits to a fair first eleven with about four capable reserves. In other words if there is a team with depth in the conference, the coach of that team is keeping it a secret.

Harrington still has a few rough spots but the defense looks pretty good. The offense is showing improvement with a little more snap in the backfield as the backs get better in their execution of plays.

A frequent observer of the Lions' practice sessions and scrimmage states that he feels the locals will be alright once they get this first actual game under their belts.

It is expected that a large group of local football fans will make the trip in order to give our boys vocal support. Football is growing slowly but steadily in Harrington. We feel that another five years will see it gain a good, strong following in this area. After all we're a little short of coal mines and steel mills in these parts. Industrial areas of that type traditionally produce some of the better players.

Late Church Bowling League

Registration for Little League football reached a new high of 54 at the Harrington Little League makes ready for its fourth year of operation. Sign-up periods were held at Harrington High School on Saturday and Tuesday.

Six Little League graduates are members of the present Harrington High School varsity. In future years former Little Leaguers will comprise practically all of the Lion team.

Bill Morris' Bears were champions of the loop in 1963. Ted Layton's Eagles were tops in 1961-62.

AMBULANCE

Violators so observed would receive warnings in the mail from the motor vehicle commissioner. Col. Eugene B. Ellis, superintendent of state police, said in his opinion the proposal would not be effective but that he would present it to the State Highway Commission for consideration "if the firemen indicate they want to undertake it."

Ellis said police work without the powers of arrest has not been effective.

Several firemen also took a dim view of the Frear suggestion. They pointed out that their service requires them to solicit funds and that contributors might not support them if they engaged in police work as well as firefighting.

They said firefighting and the training essential to doing it well take all the time most men can spare.

At their business meeting Friday, the firemen passed a resolution calling upon the General Assembly to plug loopholes in a law that permits the tax assessed on certain types of insurance premiums to be avoided. The tax, which is collected by the insurance commissioner, goes to the fire companies on a prorated basis.

There will be one more general registration in the election districts throughout the state on Oct. 17, giving additional voters an opportunity to be ready for the election Nov. 3. In addition New Castle County voters may register at the Department of Elections in the Public Building through Sept. 30.

Wildlife Federation Sports Rally Set for Oct. 3

Delawareans who may be only casually interested in outdoor sports and wildlife will have an opportunity to see just what the First State has to offer in this field Sat., Oct. 3.

On that date the Petersburg Conservation and Recreation Center, located just off Route 13 near Felton, will be turned into a combination sports playground and exhibition area as the Delaware Wildlife Federation holds its first sports rally.

The affair is open to the public according to Edmund H. Harvey, Federation president, and every effort will be made to have visitors learn more about sportsmen's plans and needs for the years immediately ahead.

Harvey points out that with Delaware's population shooting upward, interest in hunting and fishing is lagging. This he believes is because many newcomers fail to learn just what the state has to offer, or what efforts at conservation are attempted.

The Petersburg Reservation is a revelation in itself. Since its establishment about ten years ago, the Center building has been used by scores of organizations for overnight lodging, camping parties and other affairs. Dog trials are held regularly on the spacious 600 acre grounds, and small game abounds throughout the area.

At the October 3 affair there will also be an exhibition of decoys, safety clothing, hunting and fishing gear, antique firearms, plus wildlife art and photography, Harvey said.

To top off the afternoon, a barbecue beef dinner will be served from 3 to 6 p.m. after the afternoon's events will have whet appetites for an outdoor feast.

Also on hand to backstop the work of the state federation officials will be Thomas L. Kimball, executive director, National Wildlife Federation, who is a native of Phoenix, Arizona.

A prolific writer and lecturer, Kimball directs operations of the National Wildlife Federation from Washington. This group has affiliates in all fifty states, made up of more than 8,000 member clubs and having 2,000,000 individual members and contributors.

Kimball's talk will be preceded by hunter safety and law enforcement demonstrations. Tickets for the rally may be secured from Mr. Harvey at 1014 Washington Street, Wilmington, or from Jay Harnic, Delaware Game and Fish Commission, Dover, or Allen H. Misener, 109 Rodney Street, Rehoboth Beach.

1st Heritage Plaques Will Mark Week

The first "Delaware Heritage" plaques are expected to make their appearance during American Landmarks Week.

The Delaware Society for the Preservation of Antiquities, which has agreed to pay for the plaques, has been placed in charge of coordinating the Delaware observance of the week, Sept. 28 to Oct. 4.

Initially, the plaques will be placed on buildings and sites selected by the historic areas committee of the Greater Wilmington Development Council for inclusion in its list of Delaware Heritage Buildings and Areas in New Castle County. The Junior League is cooperating in the project which eventually will involve 11 plaques.

Samuel B. Bird, president of the antiquities society, said another project he has in mind for observing the week will be to request the various preservation and historical societies to hold open houses at the buildings they are restoring.

Gov. Elbert N. Carvel has endorsed statewide observance of the week, Bird said.

Fall Crop Varieties Named by University Agronomist

Grain and forage variety recommendations for fall seeded small grains have been released by the University of Delaware. Dr. William Mitchell, extension agronomist, says the variety list he is recommending is about the same as for 1963.

He is particularly encouraged by the wheat variety "Monon." Although it has been previously approved for Delaware growers, he says it is still gaining in importance. Monon is an early maturing variety that comes off early enough in the summer to be followed by soybeans. Mitchell feels this system would benefit a lot of Delaware farmers.
