WINSOME LINDA KNEPPER, can't quite make up her mind which division of this year's National Chicken Cooking Contest to enter. An ocean voyage for two on the luxury liner "Queen of Bermuda" plus a nine-day stay for two at an equally luxurious inn beckons her as top prize at the National Cookoff next June in the outdoor barbecue division.

But there's also a trip through the wild blue yonder by Pan American jet clipper to Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands plus a week-long vacation for two at a glamor hotel as top prize in the range division.

Linda, 19, a good cook as well as a beauty, is from Bridgeville, and was selected to represent her community in the Delmarva Pageant last June at Salisbury, Md.

She solved her present dilemma by entering a separate recipe in each of the two cooking divisions to become Bridgeville's first candidate in the 1966 contest.

Nearly 200,000 entry blanks have been distributed already, the contest sponsors report, and requests for additional copies are being received daily at contest headquarters, Delmarva Poultry Industry, Route 2, Box 47, Georgetown. Food editors, utility companies and appliance manufacturers have joined efforts with the poultry industry to bring the contest to the attention of housewives nationally. Last year, finalists from 49 states and the District of Columbia competed in the National Cookoff at Salisbury, Md.

Deadline for entries in the '66 contest is midnight, Jan. 31.

It is the Epiphany Candlelight Service which always comes the first Sunday after Epiphany which commemorates the manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles. During the service the entire events of the Christmas and Epiphany seasons are reviewed in scripture, the singing of carols and pageantry. Candles on the altar are lighted representing the birth of Christ, the adoration of the shepherds, the song of the angels, the coming of the wisemen, and the sending of the light into all the world. The latter is concluded with the lighting of a candle from the Christ candle by every member of the congregation. Visitors are cordially invited to this service.

Linens Bloom For 'White Sales'

January's "white" sales have become "bright" sales. Household linens are blooming in all shades of the rainbow, says Miss Janet Reed, extension clothing and textiles specialist, at the University of Delaware.

Coordinated colors and prints for bathrooms and bedrooms are being promoted widely. Bed linens and towels may be bought in solid colors coordinated with prints so that the homemaker can mix and match just as she does with separates for her wardrobe.

The new colors and designs are lovely indeed. However, it may not be a true bargain to buy merely for color even in the January sales. Replace household linens only when they are worn or the supply is low, suggests Miss Reed.

Be careful that color and design are not used to camouflage poor quality. Colorful linens should be labeled "colorfast" or "vat dyed" so you can be sure they will keep their color as long as possible. Hot water and bleaches may be used in laundering, but prolonged use of very hot water of strong bleach will cause most colors to become somewhat faded.

If you use self-service laundries where the water temperature cannot always be controlled, this factor may be more important than if you launder at home.

The newest trend in sheets is toward the use of blends of synthetic and natural fibers, Miss Reed says. Sheets made from high modulus rayon fibers, such as Zantrel and Avril, blended with cotton fibers are supposed to be stronger than the all-cotton sheets of comparable weight.

High modulus rayon represents a new development in rayon fibers. The new rayons have excellent wet strength and a fine, silky hand. They will not shrink or stretch in laundering. They are fairly inexpensive so that a fairly high percentage of the fiber can be used in a sheet without increasing the price a great deal.

Dacron and cotton blend sheets are new on the market. They are relatively wrinkle-free, but still quite expensive. Permanent-press sheets are still in the future, Miss Reed says. Manufacturers are trying to improve the wearing qualities of this type of sheeting before introducing it.

Larger mattresses call for larger sheets, but it is a good idea to check the dimensions of the mattress before buying. A flat sheet should have an extra 10 inches for tucking in at the bottom, 10 inches at either side, 10 inches to turn over the blanket at the top, six inches for shrinkage in length—a sheet does not shrink in width—and six inches for hems. All sheet sizes on labels are given in the size before hemming and washing.

Look for the new flat sheets with a two inch hem at both top and bottom. These sheets can be reversed for more even wear, Miss Reed explains.

The January white sales are an excellent time to buy off-size sheets at a reduced price. A greater variety of sheet sizes are available now. Some stores or mail-order houses feature flat sheets from the cot size, 63 by 99 inches, to a dual twin size, 108 by 122 inches. Fitted sheets are available to fit any bed size from short cots, 30 by 72 inches, to extra long dual twin beds, 78 by 84 inches. The dual twin size sheets fit two twin beds with a common headboard.

"King" and "queen" size sheets can be found now in some fashion colors and coordinated prints. There will probably be a wider choice of prints as these large size beds become more popular, Miss Reed says.

Standard sheets are made from muslin and percale. Percale is made from combed cotton yarn; two qualities are available. The finest quality percale has a thread count of 200 or more threads per square inch, while the next quality has a thread count of 180 or more. Medium weight muslin has a thread count of 128 or more threads per square inch. The higher the muslin thread count, the heavier and stronger the sheets. Thread counts are sometimes taken after the sheet has shrunk slightly from washing.

Percale sheets are smoother to the touch and feel more luxurious, but they are more expensive than muslin. However, muslin wears well; as a matter of fact, a good muslin sheet can outwear a percale sheet. A muslin sheet will take longer to dry than a percale, however.

Discover Wonderful Del.

Delaware's fourth largest city is an often overlooked haven of historical points of interest which belongs on the list of Delaware wonders worth seeing.

Milford, a city of two countries depending on which side of the Mispillion River you are on, has a population of 2,248 in Sussex County and 3,547 in Kent County (according to 1960 census) for a grand total of 5,795 residents.

The town derives its name from the combination of the words "mill" and "ford". It was founded because of an agreement in 1787 between Rev. Mr. Sydenham Thorne and Mr. Joseph Oliver to build a dam across the river, lay out building lots and encourage builders by offering them 99 year ground leases in perpetuity. The dam afforded a convenient place to cross the Mispillion and gave the community its first claim to fame becoming known as the "mill ford" or Milford.

Milford offers much to the historical buff as its many recreational facilities. The community and surrounding area provides many lakes and ponds offering boating, fresh water fishing and ice skating in addition to easy access to salt water fishing. The town comes complete with golf course and organized community sports.

Historically, Milford offers some historical buildings and points of interest including the Parson Thorne Mansion at 501 N. W. Front Street which is the property of the Milford Historical Society. The oldest part was built in 1730 by Joseph Booth and is named after the Rev. Mr. Sydenham Thorne the first rector of Christ Church and co-founder of the town.

Christ Episcopal Church on Church Street at N. W. Third was founded in 1704 by the Society of the Propagation of the Gospel and its church yard contains the grave of the other founder of the town, Joseph Oliver.

Abbott's Gristmill at Abbott's Mill Pond was built in 1808 and is one of the sites open to the public on "Old Milford Days". The major activity of the Milford Historical Society is the sponsorship of "Old Milford Days" held on the third Saturday and Sunday in September.

Milford gets its share of visitors and publicity during these special celebration days, once a year, but many are not aware of its year around appeal to the unscheduled impromptu visit.

In strolling or motoring around the community its historical heritage and civic pride is self evident to even the most casual observer. The maintenance and cleanliness of public, as well as, private property is outstanding, in almost every case, leaving the outsider with a definite feeling of exemplary community spirit.

FENCE TALK with George K. Vappa

Preview for 1966. News media at the turn of the year smother us with all sorts of predictions.

1. Electronic "brains" can help farmers solve their future problems. This of course refers to computers which weigh farm inputs and choices to yield the highest returns.

2. The interstate highway system will have more effect than most farmers realize. With only 1.2 per cent of total U. S. highways, it will carry over 25 per cent of the traffic forecast for 1975.

3. An insert speaks of shipping white potatoes in boxes in preference to bags. The bags are cheaper, boxes offer less damage, can be palletized easier in mixed loads, and load more efficiently.

4. Would you believe it, a machine has been developed to tray pack 2,000 forty pound cartons of oranges in an eight hour day.

5. The bageymen for fruit and vegetable farmers lately has been seasonal help. Organized labor and government activities have removed foreign nationals (mostly Mexican braceros).

Stick files went out of fashion years ago, but some of us persist in using them. For the uninitiated, a stick file is simply a long nail mounted on a base upon which you punch thru a completed message transaction.

Tickler files are one cut ahead of the stick file. They are reminders strategically placed for further action. I keep several. A messy desk filled with notes and reference folders. A desk calendar for notes. Most farmers will carry a small notebook in their shirt pocket.

The round file is a favorite target. It's the place you throw away something you can use tomorrow. On balance, it's probably better to get rid of doubtful records than it is to save them.

Here is one test of doubtful material. Let it sit in a pile about three months. Go through it again and by that time you should be able to get rid of three fourths of it.

It's a new year. What better way to start out than by clearing off the desk to begin anew.

Veteran's News

The Veterans Administration warned veterans and dependents of deceased veterans on VA pension rolls they run the risk of having their monthly payments discontinued if they fail to return the income questionnaire forms mailed with the November checks.

They may even have to pay back the money received in 1965. Mr. Fields, manager of the Wilmington VA Regional Office, said they must be returned by January 31, 1966.

Mr. Fields said the VA is required by law to obtain this income report each year because pensions are paid only to those whose incomes from other sources are below certain limits.

The VA asks that the card not be folded or mutilated because it must run through automatic data processing machines.

Chickens Sell For $76-A-Pound At Selbyville Auction

Delmarva chickens sold at Selbyville last Friday for $76 a pound at 1965's closing auction market session of the Eastern Shore Poultry Growers' Exchange.

Sale was the feature of ceremonies celebrating the billionth pound of broiler-fryer chicken produced this year on the Delmarva Peninsula, the first time this goal had been achieved by the Delmarva poultry industry.

Some 90 poultry buyers and poultry industry officials from as far away as Washington and Philadelphia thronged the Exchange Building on Route 113 at the northern edge of Selbyville as long-time Exchange auctioneer Carrol G. Long of Salisbury, first put 26 lots totaling 259,200 chickens under the hammer for prices that ranged from 15.9 cents to 17.1 cents per pound and then offered two crates of six chickens each to buyers in a special sale commemorating Delmarva's billionth pound of chicken produced this year.

First lot went up for bid to the Exchange's 19 approved buyers. Spirited bidding started at 25 cents a pound for the 27-pound crate of chickens and ended some 12 minutes later with Howard and Homer Pepper of H & H Poultry Company of Selbyville, making the final call at $76 a pound.

The second lot, auctioned off to commercial users such as hotel and restaurant buyers finally went under the hammer at $31 a pound to Jim and Jack English of Salisbury, Md., owners of the English Grill restaurants. They catered their prize chickens for New Year's Day dinner for Delaware's Governor Charles L. Terry, Jr., at Dover, Maryland's Governor J. Millard Tawes at Annapolis, and Virginia's Governor Albertis Harrison at Richmond.

Present at the ceremonies were three of the four children of the late Mrs. Wilmer Steele of Ocean View, who, in 1923, raised and sold a flock of 500 young meat-type chickens which poultry historians recognize as the start of Delmarva's and the nation's present giant broiler-fryer industry that now grosses over a billion dollars a year. They sold for 62 cents a pound.

The three, Mrs. Jean Steele Bunting, of Bishopville, Md., and brothers Irvin E. and David of Ocean View, were presented with a ceremonial plaque in honor of their mother's achievements by Wm. R. Murray of Frankford, outgoing president of the Delmarva Poultry Industry Association which helped sponsor the ceremonies. Outside the Exchange building, brought to the event by truck, was the weatherbeaten little red poultry house in which Mrs. Steele started her first flock.

It was placed on permanent exhibit on the grounds of the University of Delaware Agricultural Substation, near Georgetown, as a gift of the Steele family. Speakers at the ceremonies besides Murray, auctioneer Long and the Steele children included Dave Murray, of Ocean View, president of the Exchange; Ken Layfield, of Ocean View, Exchange manager; Charles R. Fulton, of Snow Hill, Md., incoming president of the Delmarva Poultry Industry Association, and Mrs. Emily Womach, assistant vice president of the Sussex Trust Co., of Laurel, and co-chairman of the 1966 Delmarva Poultry Industry Association fund drive.

Long, in putting the billionth-pound crates of chickens under the hammer, noted that "this is the first time in the Exchange's 13-year history that there has been a feather in the place." Chickens are not brought to the auction but are inspected at the farm one or two days before each market session by buyers representatives.

Exchange president Dave Murray noted that the Exchange has listed more than 45-million Delmarva chickens for sale this year and has offered for sale a total of 1,249,400,120 chickens in its 13 1/2 year existence as the nation's largest live poultry auction.

Delmarva Poultry Industry, Inc., president Bill Murray, reported that preliminary estimates showed that growers of the Delmarva Peninsula this year have produced 260,303,000 chickens weighing 1,002,166,550 pounds liveweight. He said that official government records back to 1934 plus a study of old university and industry records between 1923 and 1934 indicated that total production of Delmarva chickens in the past 43 years since Mrs. Steele started her first flock was approximately 13-billion, 340 million pounds.

After the special ceremonial auction of the two crates of chickens representing Delmarva's billionth pound for 1965, Fulton presented Mrs. Womach two checks representing the proceeds of the bidding as an advance subscription to the industry's 1966 fund drive. They totaled $2889. Mrs. Womach, in accepting the checks in behalf of her committee, noted that the poultry industry had brought more than $200-million into the Peninsula's economy during 1965 and said that it had brought a billion dollars to Delmarva in just the past seven years alone.

Incoming Delmarva Poultry Industry Association president, Charles Fulton, said that today's ceremonies represented an all-time, all-Delmarva occasion and reminded those present that the $76 a pound paid for the first ceremonial crate of chickens at the auction probably represented the all-time high bidding for a meat product. He said that the all-time high bid for a grand champion steer at the nation's livestock shows was the $35.50 bid at the American Royal Livestock Show in Kansas City 20 years ago. This year's grand champion at the International Livestock Show in Chicago earlier this month brought $10 a pound.

Following the ceremonies, buyers and guests were treated to a smorgasbord of ten speciality products especially brought in for the occasion from the Peninsula and other poultry states. These included chicken scrapple, chicken sticks, Delmarvalous drummettes, smoked chicken, boneless stuffed chicken breasts, boneless stuffed chicken legs, breaded chicken patties, chicken breast loaf, prepared chicken salad, chicken and bacon loaf, and breaded chicken fillets.

Hungry World Challenges Agriculture

America's great agricultural know-how may be one of the most important factors for world peace and stability during the years ahead. If this happens, the dean of the College of Agricultural Sciences at the University of Delaware believes those trained in agricultural skills will find themselves in an increasingly important role. Dr. William E. McDaniel, who before becoming a dean was head of the University's agricultural economics department, says there are many indications that the nation's leaders are giving more thought to the great need to feed an ever-growing world population. "As we face this prospect, it becomes evident that many of the controls will be lifted from agriculture, and that the surpluses of the past will disappear."

To some extent this is happening already. He believes the pace will accelerate, and the challenge to the colleges of agriculture across the nation to provide leadership will be even greater. "Increasing food production for export, and supplying technical know-how to developing nations to help them feed themselves could be one of the most important factors in a stable and peaceful world."

McDaniel believes the already pressing need for a "bountiful agricultural harvest" is opening up broad opportunities for young people trained in agricultural production, management, marketing, research and education. Across the nation agricultural colleges are feeling increased enrollment pressures. The current enrollment for the nation is up 5000 students over last year. At the University of Delaware the number of freshmen enrolled in agriculture increased 54 percent for the 1965-66 school year, while the total enrollment in the college of agriculture shot up 20 percent.

As American agriculture is called upon to produce more instead of cutting back as in the past decade, McDaniel believes demands for qualified agricultural specialists will go far beyond current supplies. "The growing of food is but one of the many areas where professional agriculturalists will be needed. Skilled workers will also be needed in firms that process and market food as well as in businesses that manufacture and distribute such items as farm machinery, fertilizer, feed and chemicals."

Milk Production Increases in U. S.

Milk production in the United States is increasing, and the milk surplus is decreasing, according to Dr. Wilbur R. Hesselstine, associate professor in the department of animal science and agricultural biochemistry and extension dairyman at the University of Delaware. Speaking at the first winter dairy meeting, January 5, he said the trend in the dairy industry is toward fewer dairymen each producing more.

The increased milk production is largely due to the mechanization of dairy farms. Mechanization increases output and minimizes labor costs, Hesselstine stated. The dairy industry is striving towards more complete mechanization and increased production per unit.

"Our educational goal is to help the dairymen who wish to produce more efficiently to earn a greater profit."

Hesselstine predicted a slight increase in the price paid to producers for class one and class two milk. This does not mean a price increase to consumers, he said.

Dr. Charles Chance, University of Maryland, William Messick, Farmington; and Eugene Bullen, Middletown, spoke on the various aspects of herd feeding.

The second in the series of six winter dairy meetings is scheduled for January 12 at three locations throughout the state. The program will be presented at 10:15 a. m. at the University of Delaware's Georgetown Substation, at 1:15 p. m. at the William Eliason farm, Harrington, and at 8 p. m. in the Crothers Brothers Store, Mt. Pleasant.

University specialists will use the Joseph Bailey & Sons farm, Georgetown, the Eliason farm and the Eugene Bullen farm, Middletown, as farm planning examples. The specialists will discuss the ways that planning could help to increase the production and profit on these particular farms.

The dairy meetings on January 19 will concern mastitis prevention, and on January 26 the dairymen will discuss silage storing methods. An "open barns" meeting is scheduled for February 2 at three locations in the state. Dairymen are invited to visit the dairy production facilities of Wills Passmore, Odessa; David and Ron Robbins, Milford; and Granville Shockley, Milford.

The final meeting on February 9 will be held at the University of Delaware in Newark for Dairy Day, an annual feature of the University Farm and Home Week. The presentation of dairy awards and speeches on production ideas, marketing and the future of the dairy awards and the future of the dairy industry will be included in the day's activities.
