Delaware Food Market Report

by Anne Holberton

It might have been way back in one million BC when Peking man is thought to have first used fire for food preparation. Romantics visualize a flash of lightning touching off a blaze. However it was, after one taste of meat roasted in fire, man has always loved a barbecue.

The word "barbecue" comes from the Spanish word "barbacoa." This is the name of the West Indies natives of the wooden framework they used for grilling smoked meat and fish. Early Spanish explorers' enthusiasm for this cooking method eventually influenced the architecture and food customs of the Southwest.

The early French-Canadians borrowed the word "barboka" from the western Indians. French explorers of the Mississippi Valley twisted the word into the modern "barbecue".

English writers from 1600 on used the phrase "to barbecue" to describe a large animal broiled over an outdoor pit. Around 1730 barbecue began to mean family picnic, county fair or political rally at which the tasty meat was served. George Washington mentioned barbecues in his diary.

Barbecuing continues to be a popular American tradition, with equipment ranging from a table-size Japanese hibachi to elaborate electric spits. Homemade and commercial barbecue sauces make gourmet dishes of hamburgers, wiener roasts, and chops.

The definition of barbecue in cooking terms simply means to roast or broil meat slowly over an open fire with a highly seasoned sauce. This term is often used to describe meat broiled over an open fire without sauce, so it gives you lots of choice as far as the type of meats you may use. Beef, lamb, pork, broilers and turkey are all excellent choices; just make sure you choose tender cuts from the red meats and young turkeys. The broiler-fryers are just perfect as they are. When selecting the meat, choose high quality or top-grade meat. Look for cuts that have a large percentage of edible meat to bone, evenly distributed fat, and good color. Use steaks and chops as least one inch thick for outdoor broiling, as thinner cuts tend to be dry.

Here are a couple of barbecue tips for you. For rotisserie cooking, a balancing act is a must so that the spit will turn. Tie chicken or turkey legs and tail together tightly with string to make it compact roast, then mount it right in the middle of the spit. In threading kebobs, leave space between meat cubes so they'll brown on all sides. Tongs are handy helpers if meat has been marinated. Hot dogs and hamburgers can be served kebobs style. Simple wrap bacon slices round and round the meat. To make hamburger kebobs shape like hot dogs. For easy turning, string two or more franks, or hamburger kebobs, on a pair of metal skewers. To make them extra tasty place a nippy onion in the center. It is a delicious economy meal.

Protection From Mildew

As the summer humidity goes up, so do chances for mildew to strick your home.

Be on the lookout for this ever present mold, warns Miss Coral K. Morris, extension home management specialist, University of Delaware. It appears as a thin whitish growth with a very offensive odor.

Molds are always present in the air but thrive in damp, poorly aired, warm, dark places. Areas such as cellars, closets, showers and basement playrooms are easy targets.

Mildew attacks fabrics, leather, paper and wood. Fabrics of man-made fibers, such as acetate, nylon and polyester, are normally resistant to molds. But they become mildewed if they are soiled or stained with food. Clean clothes — of any fiber, are less likely to mildew.

To prevent mildew discoloration in stored garments, remember to put away only clean, dry items. Try to keep storage places as dry as possible. A light bulb that is kept lit will produce sufficient heat to stop mold growth. For safety, be careful not to allow the bulb to touch flammable articles.

Try to keep your whole house as dry as possible. A dehumidifier or an air conditioner is an ideal way to remove moisture. Another method is heating your house for a short time; then open doors and windows.

Chemicals such as silica gel, activated alumina, or calcium chloride also absorb moisture from the air, but they're most effective in small areas. You can pick these up at department stores, drug stores, and building-supply dealers.

Remove mildew spots on fabrics as soon as you discover them, suggests Miss Morris. Brush off the mold outdoors to prevent scattering spores in the house. Sun and air fabrics thoroughly.

If any spots remain, dry-clean or wash at once with detergent and water; rinse well and dry in the sun. For stubborn stains, bleach with lemon juice and salt, sodium perborate bleach or dilute chlorine bleach.

To remove mildew from leather goods, first wipe with an alcohol-saturated cloth and follow with a wash with thick saddle soap suds. You can stop mold growth in leather goods by scattering crystals of paradichlorobenzene (moth crystals) or paraformaldehyde powder in shoes or luggage; then keep in tight containers. After storage, air thoroughly before you use.

Scrub mildewed floors or woodwork with a mild alkali such as washing soda, trisodium phosphate or quaternary disinfectant. Paint and grocery stores or janitors' supply houses sell these products under various trade names. Rinse the wood well with clear water and allow to dry thoroughly. Then apply a mildew-resistant paint.

Mildewed paper should first be wiped with a clean, soft cloth to remove any dry, loose mold. If books are damp, sprinkle pages with cornstarch or talcum powder to absorb moisture and allow to set for several hours. Any stains can be removed with ink irradiator; use carefully and sparingly.

A fact sheet on "How to Remove Mildew" is available from the Cooperative Extension Service at the University of Delaware. For copies, write the Mailing Room, Agricultural Hall, University of Delaware, Newark 19711.

WHY DOES THE ELECTRIC COMPANY DO IT?
On one hand D P & L Co. urges you to live better electrically. They urge you to buy electric appliances and to install electric heat.
On the other hand, news articles continue to forecast power shortages this summer for people up and down the east coast.
Why, then, does the company continue to promote appliances and electric living?
First, the threatened power shortages are of seasonal and temporary nature. They may occur as multitudes of people turn to the comfort of air conditioners for relief from heat and humidity.
Second, new power plants come in to service each year, producing additional kilowatts, so that eventually there will be enough for even the summer peaks.
Delmarva Power & Light Co., along with other utilities, expects to keep growing in order to continue providing dependable service at reasonable rates. The alternative to growth is stagnation and a falling out of step with the times. Electric companies cannot become apathetic about the future while they face a seasonal problem of shortages this summer. They must continue to promote their product ... electric service. That's the basic reasoning for a continuing sales promotion program.
Electric companies are proud of their continuity of service over the years. There is nothing they would like better than to deliver all the electric power customers want, at any time, regardless of time or weather. They regret extremely any need to request curtailment of usage and hope customers will understand that, if such a request is made, it is done in order to forestall real trouble, like cascading outages which could result in blackout.
