Your agricultural agent will phase out this part of his career at the end of 1970 when I retire on disability. Most people know the reason has been the slow recovery from the stroke suffered fifteen months ago. But the doctors feel I should reach ninety percent of my former health with continued therapy.

Extension work must be more than just a desk job. An agent should visit his clients at the farm once in awhile, attend meetings, hold field trials, and give counsel whenever a problem comes up.

In recent years, our audiences widened to include urban and suburban people. I have felt that county land use planning, zoning, and similar tools should interest each of us because of our growing population.

Nationwide today, our people are one third rural, one third urban, and one third suburban. The rural group may not be farmers, but simply live in the country. By the same token, some of the farmers may dwell in town. By any standard of measure, the rural dweller may be as comfortable, or more so, than his city brother. Take a look for yourself sometime.

Pollution, ecology, and similar terms attract the interest of all today. For many of us are concerned about the world, which needs help to cleanse itself and to keep it a fit place to live in. Nature needs help, and soon.

At least seventy percent of our air and water pollution today comes from two sources: home heating plants and private automobiles. We tend to blame industry for its minor share, but I find them making the best effort to resolve the portion.

You and I need to fire ourselves up to work for answers to these matters. Make it a New Year's resolution.

If you have a little spare time on your hands now, mid winter is an ideal time to fertilize your shade trees. However, you should do this chore when the soil is not frozen. Feed the root system with 2-5 lbs. of a 10-6-4 fertilizer per inch of trunk diameter by perforating the entire dripline of the tree with holes about eighteen inches deep and two feet apart. A hand augur drill is preferable to a crowbar because the crowbar causes soil compaction. If you do not want to drill holes, even though it is best, the fertilizer can be spread on the soil surface under the dripline, but no fertilizer should touch the bark of the tree trunk. If you drill holes, distribute the fertilizer equally among the perforations, then fill them with equal parts of topsoil, sand and peatmoss. This mixture provides aeration and water access as well as filling the saucer. The chore of fertilizing trees can be performed until early summer, however, mid winter and early spring is the best time for most trees.

Prepare your trees and shrubs for winter. Most evergreens and flowering bushes, such as azaleas, camellias, and rhododendrons, should have a two or three inch layer of mulch under them to hold moisture and reduce ground freezing. Any type of leaf mold, peat moss, or pine bark mulch will be satisfactory for this. Also, keep in mind that evergreens may need periodic watering throughout the winter. If the temperature gets above 40°F these plants may start growth and will need water, so apply water to these plants when you have not had sufficient rainfall and when the ground is not frozen.

Some shrubs and trees may require protection from cold winds during the winter, especially plants on the north side of your home. This can be accomplished by placing stakes in the ground around the plant and placing burlap, plastic, or some other material around the plant. This will keep the cold wind from desiccating your plants and also prevent excessive blowing and whipping off branches.

This brings up the point of newly planted trees around the home. Be sure that you have these young trees staked and wired to prevent the wind from whipping the branches. You will have better results in getting the plants to root and start growth in the spring.

It Seems To Me

By Janet C. Reed

The ideal of pre-cut apparel for home sewers is not really a new one but it is being revised in the era of home sewing. Self contained kits are now available with a new fashion angle and being promoted as "modular clothing." A kit contains a pre-cut garment, all notions, supplies and instructions. Sizes follow ready-to-wear standards.

Some of the kits include finished details such as pockets, decorative stitching and trimming such as nail heads or beaded areas.

Some well-known designers are getting into the act, too, and realizing the potential of the home sewing market. A designer original can be made at home, with the designer supplying the design, fabric and findings and the woman supplying the labor. A designer label is included for the status appeal.

There is a substantial saving over ready-to-wear but the kit idea is still more expensive than planning and making the outfit from scratch. Necessarily, design choice is limited. Many of the designs are on the safe, basic side that could easily be made from the beginning. But if the idea catches on, more designs will be made available.

For the woman who enjoys planning her own clothing, or who sews to obtain a better fit, the kits may not be worth the extra cost. There is some saving of time, however, so each woman must make her own choice.

And speaking of kits, there is even a sew-it-yourself panty hose kit on the market. I haven't seen it, but if women are sewing their own lingerie and foundation garments, I guess they'll be ready to tackle panty hose, too.

Change Is Key Harvesting Tomatoes To Mechanical

The key to successful mechanical harvesting of tomatoes on the Delmarva Peninsula lies in the adaptation of new cultural practices, according to Richard Northam of Massey, Md., who had 90 acres of tomatoes machine harvested in 1970.

Northam told those attending the 84th annual meeting of the Peninsula Horticultural Society that Delmarva tomato growers have adequate machines to harvest their crops; varieties that will hold up under mechanical harvesting; and the support of local processors. But before mechanical harvesters can prove their value, growers will have to change certain cultural practices.

Cultural practices that need changing include bed preparation, fertilization, weed control and planting, he explained.

Tomato growers have traditionally used a fertilization program designed to maintain a strong, vigorous plant as long as possible.

But this type of program doesn't produce more fruit, it only delays the time it takes for the fruit to mature, says Northam. A grower should put on only enough fertilizer so that the plant gets off to a good start and sets well. Then the plant should stop growing and let the fruit ripen.

For mechanical harvesting, the bed should be level and raised three to four inches above the row following the last cultivation, points out the Maryland grower. He does not recommend using a bed shaper since the rototiller may change the structure of the soil and create a hard pan that prevents good plant growth.

Good weed control is also essential for efficient mechanical harvesting, says Northam. "Twenty tons of tomatoes in the field covered with weeds will result in five tons being harvested by the machine."

Finally, growers will have to plant direct-seeded tomatoes. Northam said direct seeding reduces the cost of plants and labor in addition to producing a plant that is relatively free of disease. He recommends planting no more than 10 to 15 acres of direct-seeded tomatoes per week for each machine that will be used at harvest time.

Get A Faster Winter Start

Trucks and tractors, as well as the family car, often fall victim to cold weather starting failures during the winter months, says Thomas H. Williams, extension agricultural engineer at the University of Delaware. Low temperatures which cause thickening of the oil and reduce chemical activity in the battery are usually a major factor in starting failure.

Williams points out that an engine with 20W oil in the crankcase requires three times as much starting power at zero than at 60 degrees. Because of decreased chemical activity in the battery, however, only one-half the cranking power available at 60 degrees is available at zero.

Starting difficulty can be reduced by keeping the engine warm, says Williams.

Among the electrical engine heaters now on the market are dipstick heaters and others which heat the crankcase oil. These low cost heaters are usually rated from 100 to 400 watts and are designed for all night use.

Low wattage headbolt and freeze plug replacement units which warm the engine's anti-freeze and water solution are also widely available.

Many high wattage thermostatically controlled heating units are also on the market. These units are mounted externally and are connected to the engine by two hoses. The engine's water circulates up through the electric heater and back into the engine block by convection currents.

Thermostatically controlled heaters range in size from 400 to 2,500 watts, depending on the coolant capacity of the engine. Units may be plugged in two or three hours before starting time or may be operated throughout the night. They may also be activated by an electric timer to warm the engine just before the car is started.

Williams points out that most engine wear occurs when the engine is running cold. Use of electric heaters may help reduce engine wear in addition to providing quick starts on cold mornings.

Buying Firewood?

Before you go out to buy this year's firewood, you better understand the wood dealer's language, according to Robert F. Stevens, extension horticulturist at the University of Delaware. When he asks if you want a cord, "pick-up" or crib of wood, will you know what he means?

A cord is a stack of wood four feet wide, four feet high and eight feet long. Each piece should be two feet long. A "pick-up" load is approximately half a cord, or two feet wide, four feet high and eight feet long—enough wood to fill a half-ton pickup truck. A crib is something like a wheelbarrow load.

Keeping this in mind, base your firewood needs on the amount of space you have for storing wood and the amount you are willing to pay, says Stevens. Remember, the smaller the amount you buy at one time, the higher the unit cost.

For example, a bundle of four or five sticks—enough for one evening—may cost $2 or more. But a cord of wood—enough to last the average family the entire winter—will cost $30 to $40. Hardwoods such as oak, hickory and sugar maple give you more fuel for your dollar.

Use Care In Selecting "Pets"

Though it might be fun to own the only exotic animal in the block, such pleasure has its hazards, warns Dr. William C. Krauss, associate professor of animal science at the University of Delaware.

One of the problems of bringing unusual pets into the household is that many people do not know how to care for them properly. They may not know the animal's nutritional needs, their sanitary habits or the kind of shelter they require.

For example, Krauss says some monkeys are vegetarians while others need meat in their diets. Skunks, which are nocturnal animals ordinarily, soon lose their appeal when the owners discover these animals like to sleep in the day and roam at night. Also, it is usually impossible to "housebreak" skunks in the manner one can a dog or cat.

Despite occasional stories to the contrary, it is usually impossible to successfully domesticate wild animals, Krauss stresses. They often become dangerous to both the owner and others in the neighborhood. And many cities now have laws prohibiting the housing of wild animals in one's home.

Disposing of these "pets" once the owner has tired of the novelty or is forced to get rid of the animal for some reason may be a problem. Most zoos have all the skunks, alligators and turtles they can house and will accept no more.

There is also the possibility that a wild animal will be infected with a transmissible disease, says Krauss. Monkeys and chimpanzees can transmit diseases such as tuberculosis, infectious hepatitis and intestinal infections, while pet turtles have been reported as being the source of salmonellosis in people—especially children.

Control Crawl Space Moisture

If excessive heat loss and moisture build-up are serious problems in your home, don't forget to check the crawl space under the house, says Ernest W. Walpole, extension agricultural engineer at the University of Delaware.

A crawl space should have a vapor-barrier type of ground cover, he explains. Water will move to the surface in certain soils by capillary action and evaporate within this area.

Moisture will occur in nearly every crawl space where the soil is clay or silt.

And this moisture may be present even though the ground does not feel damp.

To control ground moisture in your crawl space, cover the area with polyethylene film four to six mils thick, suggests Walpole. Turn up about six inches of the film on the walls and hold in place with sand, gravel or bricks. Crawl space ventilators can usually be kept closed during the winter with this type of ground cover.

If ground moisture is a serious problem, it may be necessary to leave the ventilators in the walls opened. Under these conditions, you should insulate any exposed water pipes to prevent them from freezing, insulate heating ducts to eliminate excessive heat loss, and insulate the floors to keep out the cold.

Walpole also points out that wet crawl spaces may be prevented by making sure rain water are drained away from the foundation walls.

Crawl space moisture should be controlled, stresses the engineer. It may lead to other problems in your house such as warped floors, damp closets, corners and windows, and paint peeling.

The Kiwanis Club's Christmas party attracted 56 persons including the Bell Ringers from Milford who were invited dinner guests.
After being welcomed by president, John Dorofee, the singing of America, and the invocation by E. Laird Kratz, all proceeded to enjoy the plenteous chicken salad and ham dinner, prepared and served by the ladies of the Greenwood Fire Company with Mrs. Mabel Farrow serving as dinner chairman, Louis O. Mills, who in turn, introduced Miss Grace Porter. Miss Porter had the Bell Ringers introduce themselves as they assembled to render their selection of Christmas carols

Lake Forest Crushes Young Delmar Team

Delmar, a tiny high school, comparatively speaking, is in a unhappy predicament, as far as athletic competition is concerned.

Art Refosco, Spartan coach, attempted to show mercy, but eleven of his charges hit the scoring column enroute to a ridiculous 99-16 waltz.

On January 5, Lake Forest will put it's 1-1 log on the line at Laurel.

Howard Tibbitt was the only bowler to hit his average, rolling a very good 544 series, including a great 225 game as Jarrell Fuel still managed to stave off the challenge of Butler's Fuel to remain in the top spot.

Although only winning two games, the Spoilers squeezed past McKnatt's to move up in the runner up spot as Penn Central came on strong in the final game to take total wood, causing a two-two game stalemate.

Gerardi Bros., although only winning two games, moved up to third place in the standings, on a fine performance by Ken Layton, who rolled a great 561 series, with good games of 203 and 204 included, and a good effort by Stan Johnson, who hit a fine 201 game.

McKnatt Funeral Home seems to be having a streak of bad luck but got together a strong challenge, although they fell victim to Taylor & Messick in three games to drop into fourth place.

Wally's Garage is on the move upward, as Larry

Breeding rolled a fine 209 game and 510 series and James Shulties hit a good 203 game, with Dave Ryan hitting an above average effort to sweep all four games from Quillen's Market on Tuesday night's setto.

Harrington Package received fine efforts from Jeff Robbins as he rolled a great 223 game, and Bob Creadick who hit a fine above average performance although they were only able to salvage one game to credit against a fired up People's Restaurant.
