

Carroll's Firing Held Unjust by Court

Delaware's Supreme Court has held that J. Noble Carroll was unjustly dismissed by the Department of Agriculture, but how much back pay he is entitled to and when he'll get it remains unresolved.

Although the court ruled that the position once held by the 62-year-old Felton Democrat was illegally abolished, he remains without a job to return to.

In April, 1969, Carroll was dismissed by Agriculture Secretary G. Wallace Caulk, a Woodside Republican. Carroll's contention that the merit system had been violated for political reasons was rejected by the State Personnel Commission.

"That's the main reason I fought it," Carroll said last week. "I thought we either had a true merit system or we didn't and maybe we'd better find out for sure."

"I didn't think it was very fair for some farmer from Woodside (Caulk) to come in there and say 'You're through, pick up your marbles and go home' just because he was a Republican and I was a Democrat."

Carroll's attorney, the late former Gov. Charles L. Terry Jr., appealed the case to Superior Court. After Terry died and his nephew, N. Maxon Terry Jr., took over the case, Judge Robert C. O'Hara ruled Carroll had been improperly dismissed.

However, between the time O'Hara heard the case and handed down his decision, the General Assembly passed legislation erasing the position Carroll held—director of markets—from the Delaware Code. Gov. Russell W. Peterson signed the bill on July 24.

Caulk then challenged the O'Hara decision before the Supreme Court, which heard final arguments on the case two weeks ago and ruled on it last week.

Throughout the litigation, Carroll's counsel attempted to prove that the ouster was purely for political purposes, but the courts preferred instead to deal with the side question of whether it was Caulk or the legislation who was empowered to abolish the position.

"I only wish they had ruled on the political aspect of the case," Terry said last week. "If they had, it would have meant that Carroll had a job to return to."

Instead, the courts have directed that Carroll is entitled to the salary in the $7,730-a-year post from the time he was dismissed until the date Peterson signed the measure abolishing the job.

Caulk still maintains the action of the Agricultural Department—initiated on the premise of reorganization for better economy was valid. He said he is not going to permit any payment of back pay until Personnel Commission directs him to do so.

There is also question as to how much money Carroll is entitled to. Caulk thinks it could be around $10,000. Terry believes it may be $8,000 to $9,000, since the Department of Agriculture maintains that Carroll continued to receive some benefits after he was dismissed.

"What bothers me," Caulk said, "is we though we saved about $120,000 in salaries by getting rid of some of these good-for-nothing positions. Now it looks like we only saved $110,000."

"There wasn't anything political in it at all," he added. "This was a guy who was obviously unnecessary to the proper functioning of the department."

Said Carroll, "The job has not really been abolished, just the title. The same thing is going on under a different name."

No cause has been attributed for the derailment which took place between 7:30 and 7:45 a.m. P. H. Hokemeyer, supervisor of Penn Central's Baltimore office, said the last of the derailed cars had been put back on the rails shortly before midnight last Thursday. The undamaged section of the train continued on to Dagsboro at 9:35 a.m.

C. of C. Hears Plans For Area EDA District

Harrington stands a good chance of being included in a district of the federal Economic Development Administration, it was revealed Tuesday at a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce by two representatives of the Greater Dover Chamber of Commerce.

John Jardine, vice president of Chesapeake Utilities, of the industrial division of the GDCC, carried the ball for the most part.

He hoped to persuade the federal government to include the whole county as an EDA district. This failing, he proposed a district running from Smyrna to Harrington to Milford. This, he explained, already includes an EDA district in the area of the county sewer, for which Kent received a loan of $2 million.

The EDA will lend money in districts it approves for location and expansion of businesses and industry at low interest rates. It will take either first or second mortgage.

Jardine said the population forecast for 1990 for Kent County was 170,000 and the population now was 80,000. He predicted an increase of population of 46 per cent in 1990 for Harrington, with most growth east of U.S. 13.

He added Harrington and Dover were the only county communities with a comprehensive plan.

In a program to attract industry to Kent County, continued Jardine, the Kent County Levy Court has appropriated $20,000, to be matched by the Greater Dover Chamber of Commerce.

Adding that Reed is spearheading the drive, Jardine said most money would go to an industrial research firm, the Fantus Company, of New York. This is the company which recommended Dover to General Foods.

Fantus, besides making a survey, now under way, would furnish a list of industries suitable and desired by the area, now planning to move or expand and the name of the plant official to see. The utilities official recommended a "rifle-shot" approach, that is, going directly to the official and explaining why the firm would do well to locate in the county.

Reed, who is also Kent County Levy Court Commissioner-at-large, mentioned GDCC funds would be raised by a dinner Thurs., March 25, at the NCO Club at Dover Air Force Base. Tickets are $100. Three hundred tickets have been printed, about half of which have been sold, Reed said. A number of tickets have been retained for local purchase. In other business Tuesday, the Chamber of Commerce agreed to meet at the Senior Center at 12:30 p.m., for luncheon at its April meeting.

President W. T. Parsons appointed a nominating committee of Arnold Gilstad, David Jones and Charles L. Peck Jr., to nominate a slate of officers and report at the March meeting.

WINTERCRESS COMES IN CANS

When the approaching spring make us think of that delectable green, wintercress, we mentioned the fact and were rewarded with a reply the peppery plant was now available in cans.

In fact, said our informant, the store cannot keep up with the demand for the product canned in Suffolk, Va.

The canned product, however, is named lambs' cress. Incidentally, John Holloway, gourmet and bon vivant, said he had already cut wintercress tho it was small.

Poems from Paradise Pastures

By W. Cliff Miller

Back in my boyhood, one of our neighbors was a kindly old lady known as "Granny Barnett - The South-Sayer" who's sayings used to make one stop and think. Luckily for me, I have lived long enough to see many of her predictions materialize. One of these comes to mind in last weeks sudden change from sub-zero, ice skating weather to balmy spring-like breezes with accompanying thunder and lightning storms.

Granny had often said the time would come when "you couldn't tell the winter from the summer, only by the green leaves on the trees" which prompts;

THE WARM DAY IN WINTER

The glorious sunshine kissed the earth And melted all the snow, The warm wind touched the branches bare And even tempted things to grow.

Some living things that hibernate Came out to greet the day, And every man put by his coat And hummed a little summer lay.

Although mid-winter was the time The very air seemed tender, And brought a breath of summer back When June called on December.

Just a day to live again And long again for springs, When June called on December And fooled the living things.

Letter to Editor

Dear Mr. Burgess:

I have before me the December 31 issue of the Harrington Journal in which you devoted your editorial to the death of Fulton J. Downing. I would be pleased if you could find in your next issue space to devote to this additional comment regarding a great person.

During my year as District Governor of Rotary International, July 1, 1969 - July 1, 1970, it was my pleasure to work with Fulton. During that period, his club under his leadership was the recipient of the award of the greatest percentage increase in membership of any of the 68 Rotary Clubs in the district.

In his approach to the business and professional men of Harrington to join that Rotary Club, Fulton said this: "I think enough of Harrington to feel that it needs a good Rotary Club, and I feel strongly enough about Rotary that I think it needs you. And I think enough of you to think you need Rotary."

So it was not only Harington that lost a substantial asset, its Rotary Club and Rotary as a whole did so too. Sincerely, Henry G. Naisby

Does Irrigation Pay?

With the growing interest among many Delaware farmers in irrigation systems, the question is often asked — "Does irrigation pay?"

On many crops, irrigation can result in higher returns and profits, according to W. cultural economist at the T. McAllister, extension agronomist at the University of Delaware.

He says irrigation of most vegetable crops is essential. Farmers can't afford to risk high investments in land, machinery, labor and other production factors to droughts. Also, greater emphasis is being placed on the production of high quality vegetables and irrigation can help assure a uniform crop.

Although irrigation usually pays the highest returns on vegetables, farmers growing corn for grain or silage may also find irrigation a good investment. McAllister says tests have shown that on Delaware's lighter soils with low moisture-holding capacity, corn yields have been increased as much as 80 bushels per acre by irrigating at critical periods. On heavier soils with a higher water-holding capacity, the increase in production from irrigation may be somewhat less.

The economist says irrigation would have to increase corn yields 25 to 30 bushels per acre to cover the added costs of production. Fixed costs of owning and operating an irrigation system will vary between $25 and $35 per acre, depending on the type of system, the number of acres it will cover, source of water and the amount of management required to run it. It will also cost between $5 and $10 per acre to put on five inches of water per year.

But without the devastating effects of drought, farmers can use more fertilizers, more plants and seed and increased labor, power and other production inputs for maximum yields. Thus, McAllister says irrigation can be viewed as a method for increasing the size of a farm operation—using more inputs and getting extra production per unit from fixed resources of labor, land and machinery.

He does not recommend irrigating soybeans unless growers can push yields above 40 bushels per acre. Even then, the returns from irrigated soybeans would not be as profitable as those from irrigated corn until yields reached approximately 55 bushels per acre.

Irrigation introduces a whole new set of management decisions and practices; these involve physical, economic, engineering and legal relationships. All are important to the success of the farm—should be carefully evaluated before irrigation is introduced.

It is not only a question of whether irrigation will pay cautions McAllister, but does it pay well on one crop as another? Or would the money invested in irrigation actually yield a greater return if it were invested in some other practice? For instance, would a drying-storage unit, additional acreage, or a livestock operation result in even larger returns? As in most management decisions, there are many alternatives that should be considered before deciding on the one best suited to an individual farm.

Holstein Project
Delaware 4-H'ers and FFA members will have another opportunity in 1971 to participate in the Delaware Holstein Heifer Project. The directors of the Delaware Holstein - Friesian Association recently voted to continue the youth program started last summer.

According to Dr. W. R. Hesseltine, extension dairy specialist at the University of Delaware, 30 registered Holstein calves were sold to club members last year. The average price for these animals was just under $130.

The young contestants agreed to raise and show these calves for two years, Hesseltine explains. Then the animals are to be sold at the annual state Holstein sale during the Delaware State Fair. As two-year-olds, the calves are expected to sell for $500, but some could bring as much as $700 or more.

Each heifer should be bred to calve shortly after the final sale. This will normally bring the highest possible price for the animal, and thus more profit for the young owner.

The purpose of the heifer raising project is to assist and encourage youth to raise heifers for a project, adds Hesseltine. It is also aimed at developing the necessary skills required to successfully raise dairy animals.

For more information about the Holstein heifer project, contact Dr. W. R. Hesseltine at the University of Delaware, a county 4-H agent or vocational agricultural instructor.

Test Soybean Seed Before Planting

Delaware soybean producers who saved part of last year's crop for planting this spring should have it tested before using as seed, says Dr. William H. Mitchell, extension agronomist at the University of Delaware.

Wet weather at harvesttime last fall has resulted in poor germination of much of the seed crop, he explains. Tests by the Delaware Department of Agriculture revealed some lots germinate as low as 50 and 60 percent.

To assure good germination, Mitchell recommends planting Delaware certified soybean seed. To earn a certified label, the germination rate must be at least 80 percent. Certified soybean seed, however, is in short supply this year, again because of wet conditions at harvest.

Farmers who plan to buy uncertified seed should be sure to carefully check the label. State law requires that seed have the correct germination on the analysis tag. Mitchell points out that seeding rates may have to be adjusted to compensate for poor germination.

If you have doubts about the germination quality of your soybean seed, Mitchell suggests having it tested by the Delaware Department of Agriculture's seed laboratory.
