Delaware State Fair is interested in hooking up to the City sewer system, it was revealed Monday night at a meeting of the City Council.

Mayor William Minner said he had a letter from George Simpson, general manager of the fairgrounds, on the advisability of arrangement on connecting to the sewer system. The letter mentioned three steps but the only one brought out was hooking up to the grandstand and outside toilets.

The mayor said, "We should contact George and meet with representatives (of the fair)."

In other business: Richard Bennett wanted to build a go-cart and minibike track on the site of the old Reese Cannery near the end of Reese Avenue. The mayor recommended Bennett get the opinions of the neighboring property owners.

Mom's and Dad's Music Class

The second "Mom's and Dad's Music Class" for parents of 4th, 5th, and 6th Grade students at South Elementary School will be held on Mon., Feb. 12.

The parents will be involved in a real music class. Donald L. Banschbach, music teacher at the school, states that these special "Mom and Dad" classes are an opportunity for parents to find out more about the music ideas in the South Elementary Music program. Parents can be told about the program, however, Banschbach believes that the best way for parents to learn something about the activities is to become an active participant in a class.

Plans for the class will include writing music, playing instruments, and listening to music. These will not be "kidie" activities but real life adult programs which parents may tackle on their own level.

The class will be from 7:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. and will be held in the music room at the rear of the Dorman Street School building. Interested persons who do not have students in the school may receive and invitation to the class by calling the Elementary School Office 398-8011. Refreshments will be served following the class period.

$1 Million Plant Scheduled For Harrington

A $1-million manufacturing plant is scheduled for Harrington as soon as annexation and rezoning are done.

The site selected is 43 acres of the former Greenway property off the northbound lane of U. S. 13 and a branch of the Penn Central Railroad.

The City already has assurance of enough votes to pass the annexation referendum, while the City Council, the final authority on matters of zoning, asked the Planning & Zoning Commission to report favorably on it.

After a resolution, calling for annexation, at a meeting of City Council Monday night, Alfred Slatin, president of Arlington Heights, Ill., of Consolidated Thermoplastics Company, said his firm would break ground within 90 days "of your" (the City's) approval.

Slatin added the plant, intended to be one of their major ones on the East Coast, would manufacture backing sheets for disposable diapers.

Dr. I. Leibson, vice-president of the engineering and construction division of Dart Industries Inc., the parent group, said the firm would need a booster pump, 1,200 feet of 12-inch water main and 600 feet of 10-inch sewer. He estimated the cost between $40,000 and $50,000.

CT would pay these costs, plus an interest rate not to exceed 6 1/2 per cent, but the City would deduct the cost from its taxes, said Richard L. Murchison, state development department.

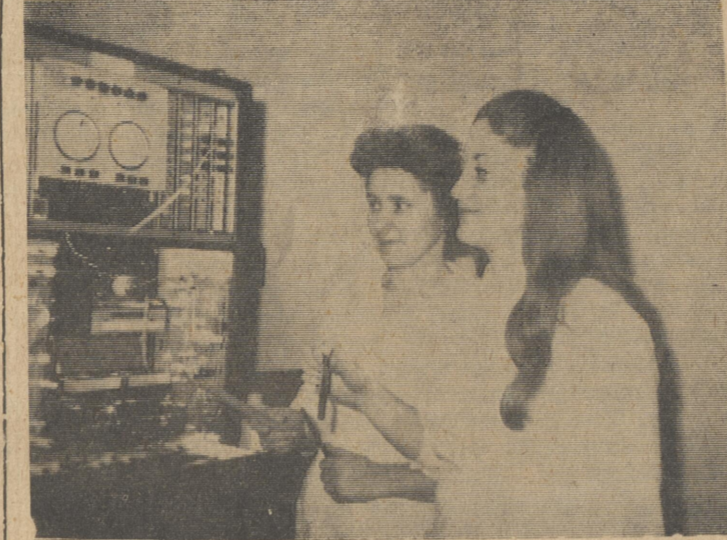

The City can refinance the sewer and water loan at its leisure.

This sewer and water agreement, worded by John L. Stevens Jr., also, of the state division of economic development, was passed by the Council, Stevens, incidentally, told the Journal the local project had been sparked by a meeting with Slatin in Puerto Rico in November, 1970. Meanwhile, the industry had been checking the area.

CT is associated with Dart Industries Inc. and El Paso Products Co. Beside the Arlington Heights (Chicago) plant, the trio have plants in Los Angeles, Calif., and Rhode Island.

The local plant is to start with 20 employees, mostly male, and is expected to double within three years.

Slatin told the Council Monday night some engineering work would be done on the site Tuesday.

GAREY OBJECTS TO CLUTTERED LOT ACROSS FROM HOME

Donald Garey, 210 Harrington Ave., was quite vehement Monday night when he appeared before the City Council to protest a cluttered lot across the street from his residence.

The lot, owned by Joseph H. Richardson, and occupied with odds and ends used in Richardson's contracting service, is, said Garey, in an area zoned residential.

Garey told the Council Monday evening he has talked to a lawyer and will sell his property and move out of town after the lot is cleared. He added if the lot were cluttered at the time he sold his house he would lose $5000.

Mayor William Minner asked the Council to back him (the mayor) up and he "would start getting something done tomorrow." Minner also instructed City Manager John S. Harrington to get in touch with the City's attorney Tuesday on the matter.

Garey said he would take legal action.

Motorists Urged To Eye Taillights And Headlights

Public safety officials urge motorists to only drive vehicles that are properly equipped with working headlights and taillights and to always turn on their headlights and taillights any time they are driving a half hour after sunset to a half hour before sunrise.

Colonel George J. Bundek, Acting Secretary of Public Safety, said vehicles with broken headlights and taillights operating on the highways at night are a hazard and operators of such vehicles will be stopped by Troopers. He said motorists will usually be warned that they have a light out the first time they are stopped, but if the same Trooper stops them the second time, they can expect to be arrested. The minimum fine for a headlight or taillight violation is $10.00 plus court costs.

"It is especially important during the winter months that drivers make use of their headlights and taillights when lighting and weather conditions are such that other persons and vehicles on the highway are not clearly discernible at a distance of 500 feet ahead," the State Police Superintendent said. "By law, every vehicle operating on Delaware highways is required to have its headlights and taillights on from a half hour after sunset to a half hour before sunrise."

"Many accidents occur during the early evening and morning hours simply because the operator of a motor vehicle couldn't see what was on the road in front of him," Bundek noted. "Rather than take a chance in not being seen, it is always better to turn on your headlights and taillights as soon as it begins getting dark or the weather condition are such that your vehicle might not be seen without its lights on."

Bundek also reminded motorists that the Motor Vehicle laws require drivers to signal that they intend to make a right or left turn before they do so. Turn signals should be used continuously for the last 100 feet traveled by a vehicle before turning."

Voluntary compliance with all traffic safety laws by every motorist will help to make Delaware's highways safe.

Plans For HUD Development Await Appraisals

The land, some 10 acres on the southwest side of County Road 275, would contain 50 modular houses and a community house.

Leon Weiner Associates, of Wilmington, will be the developer. Moyer added Friday Weiner had already authorized his architects to prepare drawings for the local project and another north of Dover.

Moyer believed work on these sites might begin within a few weeks. Four other county sites still have to be selected.

Moyer believed, in selecting these sites near but not in municipalities, a lot of friction was avoided.

He pointed out Friday the Kent projects got under the wires three days before a federal moratorium on such construction. A Laurel project, only two days.

Plans for a low-rental development near Harrington approached fruition recently with the rezoning of the land from agricultural to residential by the Kent County Levy Court recently.

Robert S. Moyer, of the state division of housing, told The Journal Friday the next step would be appraisals of the land by the federal Housing and Urban Development Department.

The monthly meeting of the Lake Forest Chapter of the American Field Service was held on Monday evening at the High School.

Business for the evening included plans for the Lake Forest AFS weekend on Fri., April 13th. Tentative arrangements have been made for Exchange Students from nearby communities to spend the day at the High School, take part in an assembly program, visit the Indian Site at South Bowers, have dinner and go to a swim party before spending the night with their hosts, members of the AFS Club. Chapter members will assist with the dinner.

Miss Celia Ribeiro, Exchange Student in the Lake Forest District, living with the Albert Mason family, has been the guest at two area AFS weekends at Cape Henlopen and with a Wilmington Chapter. The weekends are an opportunity for all of the foreign students to be together during their year away from home. This month Celia will be guest for the weekend of Feb. 9 in Seaford and Feb. 23 at Laurel. On Feb. 15th the students will be guests of the high schools in Salisbury, Md., taking part in an assembly program and being guests of honor at a tea. In the evening the Salisbury Rotary Club will entertain them and their American parents at dinner.

Celia has been accepting speaking engagements since Christmas. She has spoken at the Harrington Lions Club, Harrington New Century Club, Asbury United Methodist Women as well as the Fifth Grade of Lake Forest Elementary School at Harrington.

Of interest also, is the fact that every Thursday morning at 6:30, she speaks with her parents in Fortaleza, Brazil, through the kindness of two Ham operators. Gary Home-wood initiates the calls from his home each week to a Ham operator in Celia's home town.

The next Chapter meeting will be held March 5 at the High School.

Your Telephone Manager in Dover

TWO WAYS THE TELEPHONE CAN MAKE YOUR FEBRUARY JUST A BIT WARMER.

CALL THERE

Wednesday the 14th is Valentine's Day. Call someone you love, someone far from home. Bear in mind that classic Valentine's verse:

Roses are thoughtful,
A card says you care,
But a phone call's next best
To you being there.

BE THERE

On Monday the 19th, the nation celebrates George Washington's birthday. That makes the weekend beginning the 17th the first three-day weekend of the year.

If you plan to travel on the long weekend, remember that lots of other folks will have precisely the same plan. Phone ahead for reservations.

If, on the other hand, you are having out-of-town guests for the weekend, make sure the plans (time of arrival, number of visitors, etc.) are crystal clear on both sides. That extra phone call of confirmation can head off lots of aggravation.

A pane of glass is usually set in putty or a glazed compound. Be sure that the glazing material is not cracked or loose. Rain can be forced in or will run down into the channel and seep into the room or the other side. Casement windows leak sometimes because of improper installation. All windows should be installed with a flashing to prevent moisture from being forced in around the frame. Check your window. You can prevent much water damage by being certain they are completely watertight.

TOWN AND COUNTRY TOPICS

FRANCIS WEBB
KENT COUNTY AGENT

This article is for the birds! We should learn to enjoy birds and have a better understanding of the different types, their habitats, and the amazing lifestyle that these creatures have.

Birds are among our best known kinds of wildlife. They inhabit every part of the state. It has been determined that during the year about 270 species of birds live within Delaware's borders—some for a short time as just a few days—and a total of 127 different kinds of birds are known to nest in Delaware.

Birds are not only interesting, supplying hours of amusement, they are also good neighbors. They eat quantities of insects and weed seeds. They also have pleasant voices by which they can serenade you hours on end. And, to top it off, most of them are attractive to look at, with some being really beautiful.

Of great amusement to man is their capability of flight. They are the only creatures on earth that grow feathers; they have a body temperature from six to eight degrees higher than man's, a temperature which would be a fever high enough to kill us.

Birds are also a work horse for man, constantly searching out insects from above the tree tops to a few inches below the surface of the ground. The downy woodpecker feeds primarily on ants, beetles, caterpillars, and other insects. The barn swallow feeds almost exclusively on insects taken on the wing, while other birds live primarily on weed seeds.

However, from the agricultural standpoint, not all birds are fine feathered friends. Many crops are destroyed annually from bird feeding, both from emerging seeds as well as destroying crops as they are ready for harvest. But generally, the destructive bird species are not the ones that you would encourage to your backyard. Birds such as the Cardinal, Chickadee, Blue Jay, Purple Finch, Wrens, etc., are ones that can be enjoyed in our backyards.

Here are a few general suggestions to follow in feeding birds. Once you start feeding, it should be kept up all through the winter. When birds become accustomed to feeding in your yard, they will rely on you for winter food. Place your feeder near, but not in, shrubs, trees, or other places where birds can hide. Many birds are too wary and shy to venture far from cover. Generally, they will not fly far or remain in the open to feed. Those that do, need cover to fly to in case a cat or hawk happens by.

Try a variety of food until you find a combination that attracts the largest number of birds. You will soon find that certain foods are preferred by birds and that you can almost select the birds you want by putting out the right kind of food.

Generally, backyard birds that visit in the winter are of two kinds—those that eat seeds and those that eat insects. This means that seeds of various kinds in feeders will attract some birds and suet will be eaten by others.

Let's hit on the backyard invader, usually squirrels and cats. Squirrels can be a "good guy," but many times will scare off birds and eat a good share of their food. Cats, however, are a continuous threat in bird feeding areas.

Most bird feeders should be supported off the ground high enough to keep cats from jumping to it. When putting feeders or bird houses on poles, a smooth metal band should be placed way up the pole to prevent cats and squirrels from climbing it. This should be fifteen to twenty inches in length and high enough up the pole to keep the animals from jumping from the ground and gripping their claws above the metal strip. I have also seen metal poles used as supports, which work very nicely.

Your Co-operative Extension Service has numerous pamphlets on birds, bird feeding, and bird houses. Get in touch with us if you would like to have more information, 736-1448.

Delaware Food Market Report

By Anne W. Holberton

What's your greens handicap? I don't mean your golf scores, but if you have any "hang up" about eating greens.

Make a simple test, divide the number of times you eat greens in a week by the number of varieties of greens. If the answer is the same as the number of servings—you must have some "hang ups." There are so many delicious greens for salads and for cooking and so many ways to serve them. There is just no way of ever tiring of something green on your plate.

Not many people find it difficult to eat lettuce but there are so many other salad greens besides lettuce. But first let's check the various types of lettuce; iceberg is a crisp lettuce that grows in large round fairly solid heads. It has medium green outer leaves and lighter green inner leaves. It is the most commonly used of all since it lends itself well to slicing, quartering or wedging. Romaine is also crisp. It is a tall, cylindrical plant with dark green leaves in a loosely folded head.

Butterhead lettuce includes such varieties as Boston and Bibb lettuce. These types have smaller, looser heads than iceberg lettuce. The heads are usually slightly flat on top and the leaves are soft, green and succulent.

Leaf lettuce concludes the list on lettuce. This type is often called garden lettuce. The leaves are broad, tender and curled to smooth and vary in color from pale green to dark reddish color, depending upon the variety.

Chicory, endive, and escarole are members of the chicory family of greens. Their names are often used interchangeably. However, each has its own characteristic. Chicory is old in loosely fanned heads of green, it has curly or crinkly leaves with narrow notched edges. Endive (Belgian Endive) is creamy white and grows in a tight, cigar shaped head. To prevent the plant from becoming green, it is grown in complete darkness. This lettuce is used raw in salads, served just with a dressing. Another member of the tribe is escarole. It is green with broad slightly crinkly leaves. Chicory and escarole are very good in salads and are excellent when chocked.

Water cress is truly a prized salad green. It is a small round leaved plant that is used most often to garnish with because of its spicy flavor. But for a delightful change add a good quantity to the next tossed salad you serve.

Dandelion leaves are good also. They are dark green leaves that have saw-toothed edges. Their similarity to chicory stems from the relationship of both dandelion and chicory to the sunflower family. This green is very good cooked also.

Then there is spinach. Yes, it's excellent in tossed salads, wilted salads and just to use instead of lettuce. Use the smaller inside leaves.

These are just salad greens. Next week we will check on the cooking greens. So far are you scoring? Is your green score much lower than you thought?

It Seems To Me

Janet Reed

Every time I buy sewing supplies it seems that prices have gone up again, and some of the price rises seem unreasonably high. It appears that everyone is trying to get on the bandwagon and cash in on the home sewing boom.

But when all these price increases hit the woman who sews, it's enough to turn her back to buying ready-to-wear. The price advantage she has in making her own clothes is being eroded away.

It's no wonder that discount stores are booming. If the homemaker sews to save money she has to look for ways to economize. Why pay a dollar or more for a zipper when you can buy a similar one for twenty-five cents? She doesn't care if it's in a fancy package, and she surely doesn't need directions every time she buys a zipper.

Pattern prices keep going up all the time, too. Many women tell me they are using their favorite styles over and over again. It saves time, too, for once the pattern fits you can whip it up in a hurry without taking time to fit the dress.

There are lots of bargains in fabrics, but check them carefully. You can usually cut around minor flaws with good planning. Check fabric widths, too. Some stores cut the wide knits in half, so when knits are getting only half as much for your money. The narrower widths may not cut to as good advantage either. That type of sales gimmick makes me suspicious.

There doesn't seem to be much one can do to economize on thread, and thread prices creep up constantly, too. Remember when thread cost ten cents or less per spool, 100 yards, too? That hasn't been too long ago. Now you pay twenty-five cents or more. That may not seem like an earth-shattering increase, but if the style takes a lot of stitching, or the seams must be zig zagged, it brings the cost of the garment up considerably.

Buttons? No wonder you don't see them used much anymore. You can pay more for buttons than the rest of the entire garment.

Most knit fabrics don't need seam tape or lace as a hem finish. In fact, you'll get a better job without them, so that's one notion you can skip buying when you sew with knits.

Normally, with all the increases in home sewing and the increased volume of sales, prices should come down. The opposite seems to be true. It makes the seamstress suspicious. We hope that the notion industry isn't going to kill the goose that laid the golden egg.

Narrow Rows Can Increase Soybean Yields

Delmarva soybean farmers should be cashing in on higher yields with narrow row spacings, according to a University of Delaware crops specialist.

Edward L. Wisk, crops research associate, told farmers attending the recent Delmarva Soybean Meeting in Salisbury, Md., studies have confirmed that soybean yields can be increased several bushels per acre with 7- to 14-inch row spacings.

In tests last year at the University of Delaware Georgetown Substation, Wisk tested three soybean varieties—York, Wye and Essex—in row spacings of 7, 14, 21, 28 and 35 inches. Plots were planted on June 6 and July 8. Plant populations ranged from 112,000 plants per acre to 128,000. During the test, records were kept of plant height, height of the first seed pod, lodging and yield.

Wisk said the height of the plants was influenced very little by the row spacing. Lodging was a little more severe in the wider row spacings than in the narrower ones, although the differences were slight. He pointed out that Wye and Essex showed less lodging in the narrow rows than did York.

Narrower row spacings had no substantial effect on the height of the first pods on the York or Essex varieties. But in the Wye plots, the first seed pods set higher as the rows were brought closer together. Wisk said combine losses would be high if farmers planted this variety in rows wider than 14 inches.

In this study, there was no increase in yields with the full season soybeans when the row widths were reduced from 35 to 28 inches. However, as the rows were further narrowed, the yields increased substantially. Essex in 7-inch rows produced a 50 percent yield increase over the 35-inch spacing, Wye a 32 percent increase and York a 16 percent increase.

Although soybeans planted July 8 suffered from an unusually early frost, yield increases in the late-planted plots were still noticed as the rows were narrowed. York produced 31 percent more yield in 14-inch rows than in 35-inch rows, Wye 19 percent and Essex 14 percent.

Wisk said 14-inch rows appear to be the most practical spacings for soybeans. Although some plots—particularly Wye—had higher yields with the 7-inch row, the difficulty of planting soybeans at this distance may not be worth the little extra yield for most farmers.

Mrs. Dianich Attends NEHC Seminar

A Newark woman, Mrs. Frank Dianich, recently attended a three-day seminar in Washington, D.C., sponsored by the National Extension Homemakers Council. She is the state safety chairman of the Delaware Extension Homemakers Council.

The seminar, held Jan. 30 through Feb. 1, dealt with the rehabilitation of automobile drivers who are abusive drinkers. The program was called Operations DIRE, driver improvement rehabilitation and education, and launched the newest activity of the NEHC.

The NEHC is committed to a program which will extend the work on the abusive drinking driver problem into each state and county and eventually to the local clubs. The program included representatives from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration and the Alcohol Safety Action Projects of the Department of Transportation Alcohol Countermeasures Program. Court procedures and adjudication and leadership training were discussed.
