Reddy's consumer tips on... electric household safety Turn on the lights, sit down to a hot meal, build a bookcase in the workshop, listen to the stereo... Reddy's there to help make life a little easier. Get the most enjoyment and comfort out of Reddy's service by following his precautions for electric safety around the house: Be sure each appliance has the type of cord suited to the job it does... heavy duty cords for power tools; three-pronged grounded plugs for heavy-duty appliances; moisture resistant cords and plugs for outdoor equipment; rubber or asbestos cords for heating appliances. When disconnecting an appliance, don't pull cord; pull plug. For child safety, insert inexpensive plastic caps into outlets that are not in use. Teach children not to play with or around electric sockets or equipment. Water conducts electricity; never handle electric appliances or switches with wet hands or when standing on a wet surface. Appliances used in damp cellars, garages or workshops should be carefully grounded. Don't use an electric lawn mower or hedge clippers when barefoot, or on wet grass or hedges. Replace frayed cords and worn parts promptly. When buying new appliances, look for the "UL" (Underwriters Laboratories) label, a guarantee of safe construction. Don't place cords where they'll be tripped over or be subject to wear (under a well-travelled rug, through doorways). Remember, Reddy supplies the electricity—only you can use it safely! A no-till planting field day went on as scheduled, even if it was in the rain. If you were unable to attend, you will probably be interested in the following information, and will want to watch the progress of the no-till compared to the conventional-till area throughout the growing season.

We planted 15.5 acres of no-till corn and 4.2 acres of conventional till. This acreage was divided up into four planting sections originally designed for planters from four different machinery companies; however, only three showed up to plant April 25.

The planting went exceptionally well in spite of the rain. We planted Clark's 773, which is a 100 day corn. The residual herbicide to be used is AAtrex in combination with Lasso. The rye was killed with Paraquat with Ortho's X77 spreader sticker. Both the desiccant and residual herbicides were mixed together and sprayed on after planting.

The no-till area is located on the Elbert Harrington farm on the east side of Rt. 13, just south of the Felton light. There is a large blue and gold poster displayed at the demonstration site, which gives all sponsors co-operating in this venture. The plot will be posted throughout the summer as to the exact plot areas planted with each individual planter, as well as the treatments that were applied.

It Seams To Me

Janet Reed

No seamstress can buy fabric without touching it. Much of our fabric knowledge depends on our sense of touch. The quality of the material, how it will drape, how successful it will be for a particular style, the need for an underlining or special sewing techniques, the amount of stretch, all are indicated to those with an educated touch.

In addition, our fingers react to the texture or the surface quality of the fabric. We respond visually to texture because the surface of the fabric reflects or absorbs light. The texture appears bright and shiny, or rough with some color variation. Because we both feel and see texture, it's easy to forget that when fabric is used as wearing apparel, other people see this texture on us, an extension of our own bodies.

What does texture do to your figure? Texture cannot be sepa-

4-H Public Speaking Winners Named

Lenny Sauters, 14, son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Sauters of Hokesville, and Rita Cannon, 15, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Virgil Cannon of Bridgeville, were named first place winners in the state 4-H public speaking contest held recently in Dover.

Janet Cahall of Hartly, Keith Adams of Felton, and Susan Marengo of Wilmington, also participated in the contest.

In his speech on smoking, Sauters said that even though many people smoke, there is really no justification for it. "If you lived in New York City with a normal breathing level, you inhale pollution similar to one and one half packs of cigarettes. So, a cigarette here or there will affect you in New York or anywhere else the pollution level is high," he said.

In addition, there are many techniques today to help people quit smoking, so people, especially the young, have little excuse to continue the habit, he added.

Freedom is like a rocket launched with the Declaration of Independence, said Rita Cannon in her speech on the responsibilities of freedom. It is up to all American citizens to keep it flying. It stays up with the fuel of well-educated, responsible citizens who take part in the political process, she said.

Jerry L. Webb, agricultural editor at the University of Delaware, judged the contest.

Disbudding, Pinching Produces Better Flowers

If many flowers, including peonies, are to produce choice flowers, they should be disbudded. This is the removal of the small side buds along the stem, David V. Tatnall, extension garden specialist at the University of Delaware, explains.

When disbudding, however, be sure you don't remove the top bud, since that is the one which will produce the best bloom.

Disbudding should always be done when the buds are quite small. This allows water and nutrients to aid in making a larger terminal bud and consequently a large and better bloom.

Pinching, the opposite of disbudding, is a pruning process that helps make annual and perennial flowers more compact. Some plants like petunias, marigolds, pom-pom type zinnias and many annuals will produce more flowers if they are pinched.

When annuals and perennials have made five or six inches of new growth, pinch off the light green growing tips. This allows development of side buds which help make compact plants.

FFA Public Speaking and Parliamentary Procedure Contests

Tues., April 17, the Delaware Association FFA held its yearly Public Speaking and Parliamentary Procedure Contest.

These contests are run to teach and help provide students to develop leadership and communication skills. Each high school holds its own local contest, from which it chooses one FFA member to represent it at the State contest. The chapters decide what prizes they present to the winners.

The winner of the state contest receives a $100 bond, a plaque for his chapter, a pin, and an all-expense paid trip to the region contest. The winner of the regional contest receives an National Public Speaking Contest in Kansas City in October.

The third place winner of the senior division of the Delaware State FFA Public Speaking Contest this year was Mike Moffett from the Lake Forest chapter at Lake Forest High School. Mike's speech was entitled, "Agriculture in Delaware's Growing Economy." Mike has been a member of the Lake Forest chapter for one year.

The winner of the junior division was Bruce Stewart from the Lake Forest chapter. Bruce's speech was entitled, "Soil Conservation." Bruce has been a member of the Lake Forest chapter for one year.

The second place winners of the State Parliamentary Procedure Contest was Lake Forest chapter. The chapter wins $75 cash, and second place medals for each of its members and certificates. Team members were Jimmy Messick, Keith Layton, Lester Tucker, Rick Wheatley, Tim Sylvester, David Hrupsa, Charles Hudson and Bill Paskey.

Each team during the contest demonstrated its ability to use the opening and closing FFA ceremony. It also demonstrated its ability to handle different parliamentary procedure skills in running a well-organized meeting.

Stakeless Tomato Plants Here

Stakeless tomato plants are now here. They are available or soon will be at a number of Delaware nurseries and garden centers, especially in New Castle County.

For gardeners not yet familiar with stakeless, it is a new tomato variety just released by the University of Delaware. A unique characteristic of the plant is its extremely thick stems which are virtually self-supporting. This eliminates the staking and pruning usually required with tomato plants.

Home gardeners should enjoy this labor-saving feature, as well as the large, meaty, mild-flavored fruit Stakeless produces. This unusual tomato has large, potato-like leaves that grow so thick fruit is protected from sunscald. The plant also has good disease resistance, especially to Fusarium wilt.

Under Delaware conditions Stakeless takes about 80 days to mature after transplanting and will continue to produce fruit until frost.

Professor Eugene Brasehr, university plant scientist who originated stakeless, has a word of caution about early planting of stakeless or any other tomato seedlings. Gardeners who put plants out before the frost-free date in their area—about May 8-10 in New Castle county, slightly earlier in Kent and Sussex counties—run the risk of losing plants unless they are protected. Besides, significant plant growth will not occur outside until warm weather, he adds.

Planting Dogwoods

Dogwoods are a very popular ornamental tree. Of the 49 species of dogwood, 16 are native to the United States. They range in size from the bunchberry, which is about 9 inches tall, to the Pacific coast dogweed, which can grow as tall as 75 feet.

Flowering dogwood is most commonly grown on the East Coast, according to David Tall, extension specialist at the University of Delaware. It sometimes grows to a height of about 40 feet, but it is more common for it to be about 20-25 feet tall.

The tree usually blooms in late April or early May. During the summer it has attractive, dull green foliage. In the fall the leaves turn red and clusters of red fruit form. The fruit provides food for many animals and birds during the winter.

Flowering dogwood will grow in a variety of light and soil conditions, but flowers best in full sun. For best results it should be planted in a moist, well-drained fertile soil, but it will do reasonably well in average soil.

When you transplant dogwood, be sure to plant it in a location with good drainage. The trees have a better chance of survival if they are transplanted when they are small. However, if you are planting a few trees, larger balled and burlapped or container grown trees can be used.

When planting large trees, it is important to use nursery grown trees rather than attempting to dig them from the wild. Nursery grown trees are root pruned to force a close, fibrous root system. Trees growing wild do not have this type of root system, and so fail to survive transplanting.

The trees should be transplanted during the dormant season, about late March to mid-April. If you are planting balled and burlapped trees, the burlap should be left on, but the strings around the base of the trunk should be removed.

Plant the tree in a hole that is larger than the diameter of the root system and fill in with soil which is a mixture of equal parts soil and organic matter. Never plant dogwood too deep. The top of the root ball should rest at ground level or slightly higher.

Dogwoods grown around homes have several problems which rarely occur in dogwoods in the wild. Wild trees do not have cultivation around their roots, and rarely suffer trunk injury. As a result, they rarely die from root damage or borer infestation. When trees are grown in yards, try to avoid cultivating around their roots or hitting the trunks with the lawnmower. Damaged trunk areas serve as entry points for adult borer months to lay eggs.

Remember that the dogwood has a shallow root system. For this reason, it is important to water the trees periodically for the first year after they are transplanted. Water during dry periods after the trees are established.

In April a 10-10-10 or 10-6-4 fertilizer should be given to dogwoods. About two pounds should be enough for a 4-5 foot tree.

putting in varieties that the birds will like. There are many types of shrubs that are pleasing to people and birds, says David V. Tatnell, extension garden specialist at the University of Delaware.

To be useful to birds, shrubs must provide food, shelter or a place to nest. So, before buying a shrub, check to see if it will produce seeds or berries in quantity, or if it has dense foliage, or if it has branching habits suitable for nest building.

Many of the best ornamental shrubs grown in this area have one or more of these characteristics, so you should be able to find a wide selection at a local nursery.

Good evergreen shrubs include Laland firethorn, Buford Chinese holly, wintergreen barberry, holly osmanthus, Oregon holly grape and pfitzer juniper.

Among many good deciduous shrubs, you might consider the blueberry, cottoneasters, Japanese barberry, tatarian honeysuckle, bayberry and many viburnums including the tea viburnum and the European cranberrybush viburnum.

Adults Can Make Childhood Safer

Early childhood is a time of exploring and testing. It is also a time when many children are seriously injured. Statistics indicate that over two-thirds of injuries among pre-school children occur in or around the home.

Adults can do a great deal to protect children by taking a few simple precautions, says Mary Ann Finch, extension family and child development specialist at the University of Delaware.

Remember that babies wiggle and roll whenever they get a chance, so they should never be left alone on a bathinette, chair, table, or any other place from which they could fall. The sides of the crib should be kept up at all times.

It's natural for babies to suck on anything they can get into their mouths, so be sure that the paint on the toys and furniture is lead free and non-toxic. Toys should be soft, cuddly and too large to be swallowed. They should not have detachable buttons or eyes.

As the baby begins toddling and walking, adult precautions should be increased. Babies naturally get into everything, so all potential danger areas should be kept off limits. Gates should be installed at the head and foot of staircases, windows and screens should be securely fastened, and electric wires should not be corroded or broken.

Try to keep floors dry and clean, and use a non-skid finish wherever possible.

Light sockets should be taped and capped, electric fans and heaters should be kept out of reach, and lighters and matches should be put away. Keep electric wiring high, out of sight and unplugged when it isn't being used.

Do you know what can be done about the white marks that sometimes appear on varnished wood? Simply prepare a mixture of one tablespoon of vinegar and a quart of water; then rub this on with a soft cloth and wipe it dry. White marks that are made by hot dishes or spilled liquids can often be removed with turpentine. After such measures, always polish with silver polish or rottenstone and oil. Rubbing is what keeps furniture looking its best, so don't neglect the elbow grease!

Look for paneling at HARRINGTON LUMBER & SUPPLY, 398-3241. We stock one of the most complete selections in this area, and feature U.S. Plywood. Where Do Farm Prices Come From?

It's human nature for people to want to blame someone when they feel that they are being hurt. Farmers are being blamed by many consumers for setting present high food prices. University of Delaware extension crops marketing specialist, Roger Ginder, says, this is unfair. Far prices are really the result of the forces of supply and demand on a free market, he adds, not the doing of the farmer.

Farmers are price takers in much the same way consumers are price takers when they walk into a supermarket, Ginder says. When a farmer goes to sell his products, he doesn't set the price for them. Instead, he calls up the meat packer or grain dealer and asks what price they are paying for hogs or corn. They tell him what the price is and the farmer then decides whether or not he can afford to sell his product at that price.

If he feels it is too low, he can refuse to sell. But there is a limit to how long he can hold out. It costs him money to go on feeding those hogs and storing that grain. Once they are ready for market, he pretty well has to take the price that is offered. The farmer doesn't set the price, where do farm prices come from? In general, the prices of farm products are a result of the forces of supply and demand in a free market, Ginder says. When supply is high and there isn't much demand, food prices at the farm level will be low. However, when demand is strong and supplies are low (or insufficient for the demand) then food prices at the farm level will be high.

A free market operates a little differently than the industrial markets consumers generally deal with. This may explain some of the confusion in blaming farmers alone for higher food prices.

In a free market, explains Ginder, you have a large number of sellers, none of whom sells enough to affect the market price if he holds out for a higher price. This is the case with most farm products.

What's more, in a free market the product is homogenous. In other words, there's no difference between one seller's product and another's. Again, says Ginder, this is the case with farm products. You can't distinguish one farmer's corn from another farmer's corn. It's just not that distinctive.

And finally, in a free market there is freedom of entry and exit from the business. When there's an exceptionally high price and a good profit in the business, other producers can begin to produce that product. This often happens with farm products. If the price of corn goes up, more farmers plant corn and the supply increases. When it does, prices fall.

Ginder maintains that the root of high food costs lies in factors that offset supply and demand. One such factor is the effect of previous prices on the supply of food.

Take the recent hog market, for example. Two years ago, farmers produced a record amount of pork. Pork supplies exceeded the demand and farmers lost as much as eight cents a pound on the pork they produced. The loss discouraged some of them and they quit raising hogs. So pork production fell back to the point where supply was below demand. Pork prices rose. Now farmers are producing pork for this fall in response to the higher prices.

Weather is another factor in the supply picture. Most things that consumers buy are produced in warm dry factories, rain or shine. Food products, however, are subject to the forces of nature. Flood, drought and cold can turn a large supply situation into a scarcity almost overnight.

This year, two weather factors shortened supplies of farm products. First, there was hurricane Agnes that swept up the East Coast last June. It affected the supply of certain agricultural products. A wet, sunless autumn and early winter had a far more serious effect in the corn belt states of the midwest. Extremely wet conditions there made it almost impossible for some farmers to harvest their crops. Field losses were high. Supplies of important feed crops were cut sharply.

Surpluses and reserves also affect supply and through that the price of agricultural products. As long as the government has a surplus of a commodity, it can release some of the commodity on the market to slow down a price rise. But the surpluses are now dwindling in many products and this option for increasing supply is drying up.

Costs of production have an important effect, too. Costs are up for almost everything the farmer buys. And as costs rise, farmers have to get more for their products they sell. An example of this is meat production. Although meat prices have been high recently, feed prices have also shot up. The price of soybean oil meal in February 1972 was $120 a ton. This year in February, the price was $223 a ton. Such high production costs discourage big increases in supply and help keep food prices up.

High food costs are closely linked with inflation throughout the economy, says Ginder. If we want to do something to keep food prices down, more than the farmer is involved. Greater overall efficiency is what is really needed. This means improved management in food production so that supply keeps pace with demand. But it also means better management in general, so that wages don't outstrip the efficiency of production.
