

Wheeler's: Man and Park 'still going strong'

By Gloria Dill
On July 20, an eighty-five year old man celebrated his birthday by spending the afternoon at Wheeler's Park. As the park is often the sight of birthday parties, picnics, and family reunions, this was not uncommon. The man, however, was William A. Wheeler, who had lovingly built the park on the outskirts of Harrington town limits some 26 years ago, and has been in attendance 12 hours a day, 7 days a week ever since. Today, three weeks later, the man sits in his familiar position under an oak tree, waiting for another car to appear. His usual greeting is "Who are you with?", since many family groups get together on the weekends. After payment of a small entrance fee, the car is waved through and Mr. Wheeler resumes his watch. He speaks thoughtfully. "You know, there used to be only two houses out here. It was all woods, and a little dirt road that the railroad used when they came out to repair cars." Mr. Wheeler bought his section of the R. D. Short estate in 1948 because he "wanted a place to watch the birds." He and his wife frequently came out to eat lunch under the trees and to enjoy the wild-life. Eventually Mr. Wheeler built himself a table around one tree. When the couple came out later, they discovered others using it!

"Well, he chuckles, "I built another one so people could use it and there'd still be one for us. Next time we came out, people were using both! That was the beginning of the park right there." The man rises to hail three more cars. Upon his return Mr. Wheeler stops to watch some young boys swing on the Tarzan ropes. "You know, they were the first things I put up. Some boys climbed up and tied those ropes up for me." Now an anonymous helper from DP&L does this, every three years. "Know what, those boys are now grandfathers!"

During the winter of 1950, I cut that trail through the woods, all by hand. There I discovered the horse tree and the perfect pine. The trail is exactly one mile long." He pauses thoughtfully. "That same year I built the pavilion, so people would have a place to go if it rained. I got those up-rights for it straight out of the woods. The building even lasted through Hurricane Hazel. Now the pool . . ."

Just then, the man jumps up. "Hey!" he yells at a small boy attempting to sneak past. "Pay or else!" The boy looks startled, but Mr. Wheeler is laughing. As the boy sheepishly hands over the money, the man says "You ain't gonna skin me today! He gives the boy a wink and sends him on his way.

As he assumes his station under the trees, he asks, "Where was I?" Oh, the pool. I built that right after the pavilion. Now the train, I got that in '57. The Goldsboro Fire Co. was having a sale. They used to have carnivals, you see, and they were selling all the equipment. When I bought it, it wouldn't run, wouldn't make traction, I fixed it up and have been using it ever since."

Additions to the park include swings, seesaws, sliding boards, burro rides, and pony cart rides. Some attractions are pure inventions of Mr. Wheeler. The stream cutting through the park was raised to permit rowboats. There are four bridges, one a duplicate of the one at Cypress Gardens, Florida. Live moneys inhabit the cages in the center of the park, still another unusual attraction.

The park is open five months a year, from May until the week after Labor Day. Parking is, and always has been free, and rides are modestly priced "Sunday is the busiest day. Sometime there are four or five large groups at once."

Mr. Wheeler's story is over, and as more cars approach, he walks toward them. Suddenly, he turns around. "Don't forget to say I'm still going strong!" He greets the approaching car. "Hi! Who are you with?"

Mr. Wheeler sits in his familiar position under the oak tree. At 85, he is "still going strong."

Grinning from their positions on the sliding board are David Allen Cook of Washington, D. C., Bill Griffith and Denise Cain, both of Harrington.

tain. To him it was a clear manipulation of power which threatened to curtail the chief executive's authority in matters of state. Almost immediately he forced a constitutional confrontation between the executive and the legislative branches of government.

Johnson suspended Stanton for disloyalty and insubordination. Gen. Ulysses S. Grant received the President's approval on Aug. 5, 1867, but undercut by his own radical affiliations, Grant served only a short time before relinquishing the post to Stanton. Johnson retaliated by formally removing Stanton again and appointing Gen. Lorenzo Thomas. Stanton locked the office door and refused to yield.

The stalemate reached an impasse and on Feb. 24, 1868, the House of Representatives voted 128-47 to impeach President Andrew Johnson. Eleven articles of impeachment were drawn. Some articles bordered on the absurd, one even accused him of being a conspirator in Lincoln's assassination. The most serious articles were the first which charged him with violating the Tenure of Office Act, and the 11th which accused him of conspiring against the Congress and the Constitution.

Johnson contested the validity of the Tenure of Office Act. With justification he claimed the Southern states were not seated and therefore the legislation did not represent the entire Congress.

The North and radical Southern groups wanted the new citizens, Negroes, to have the vacant seats. Johnson opposed the recommendation and reappointed pre-Civil War Southern whites, some of whom had been officers in the Confederate Army. The critical question at issue was which branch of government had the legal power to make the appointments. Either one, by virtue of its own stance, was in a position to debate.

Att. Gen. Henry Stanberry resigned his office to become the chief defense attorney for President Johnson. Standing before the Senate on March 5, 1868, Stanberry said: "The President enters his appearance with my presence here."

The Senate of the United States of America was officially convened as a court of impeachment for the trial of the President of the United States. Without the powerful influence of Thaddeus Stevens of Pennsylvania, the measure would probably have never left the House.

Although party affiliation in the Congress was recognized as Democrat and Republican, in practice it was divided into conservatives and radicals. Stevens and the radicals lost the impeachment measure on a floor vote during Grant's appointment. They kept the issue alive, however, by securing House permission to transfer the impeachment from the Judiciary Committee to a Joint Committee on Reconstruction.

Political shuffling by Stevens managed to carry the process to the Senate. Johnson, who wanted to appear in person to defend himself, was advised against it. "The President declares that the defense he desires to make is for the people—not merely for the Senate—and that he would nothing for conviction by that body if he stands acquitted by the nation," Johnson's private secretary wrote.

Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase opened trial proceedings on March 13, 1869. In his opening address, the presidential defense council Ectanbery quickly quashed nine of the 11 impeachment articles. Angered by the chief justice's rulings favoring the President, the Senate radicals called for votes of impeachment on May 16 and 29.

On the 29th the motion carried. A mere plurality of the 54 Senators were not enough for a conviction. The two-thirds majority required by constitutional law to remove the President from office would demand a tally of 36-8.

Two Senators were too ill to walk and had to be carried to the Senate chambers to vote. They cancelled each other's ballot. A "guilty" vote was cast by Stevens, who engineered the challenge to the President, while James Grimes, recently paralyzed, opposed it. Nineteen Senators voted for acquittal. Johnson had been spared by a single vote. Although Senator Ross of Kansas tends to receive the credit from historians, no one really can say which vote tipped the scales. Every vote of acquittal was important, but it was the total which set a precedence for the vague term "executive privilege."

Always the loner, Johnson was further exiled by both parties after the trial. His attempts to muster support by assembling conservatives and crossing party lines and geographic sections failed. His loosely connected third party organizations lacked grass roots support and, therefore any real block voting.

In a final twist, he failed to receive the Democratic endorsement for re-election in 1869. He watched Republican U. S. Grant, his former cabinet member, claim the executive office which he nearly forfeited by making Grant's appointment.

Johnson lost two Congressional office bids in 1869 and 1872. Yet in 1874 on the eve of Grant's departure from a notorious scandal-ridden administration, he won a second Senate seat in the arena which had crippled his own political career. His return was greeted by cheers from the Senate. Following paralysis a year later, he died.

Little Leaguers and Senior Leaguers, it still isn't too late for you to get your name in to go. Local Lads Place In Track Meet At Franklin Field

Two thousand track athletes from Delaware, New Jersey and Pennsylvania competed in the second annual Fellowship of Christian Athletes Track Carnival held Saturday at the University of Pennsylvania's Franklin Field.

Two members of Lake Forest's 1973 state champion cross-country team took on a large field of older runners and beat most of them. Ron Mosley was third and Harry Benson was fifth in the 16-18 mile run.

Mosley, 17, will be entering Delaware State College in a few days and plans to run cross-country for the Hornets who are picked to be the top team in their conference this autumn. Mosley has been gearing his workouts lately to the longer cross-country distance (5 miles) and is not razor-sharp at this time for the shorter track distances. Otherwise he might have been a double winner Saturday. He's equalled Saturday's winning time in the 880 of 1:58.2 and has run a mile in 4:33, compared to a 4:36.4 which won at Franklin Field.

Benson, 16, ran in the 16-18 class and could have been almost two full years younger than some of his rivals. Nevertheless, he ran a 4:46 mile to get fifth place, just 9½ seconds off the pace. Benson will be a junior at Lake Forest and is the choice of many Spartan harrier boosters to fill Mosley's No. 1 spot as this district attempts to defend its title.

The clockings at Franklin Field indicated that three locals who didn't make the trip would have fared well.

Maurice "Reese Cup" Coverdale, at 11 the Junior Olympics Delaware champ, has a clocking close to the Philadelphia best (2:37.2).

Thirteen-year-old Jackie Williams and 12-year-old Jackie Guyton would have definitely been in the top three of the girls' mile run.

Two Wilmington Wednesday night track meets remain on the local schedule. Area athletes have won more than 100 ribbons, medals, placques and trophies this track season. It's been a banner campaign.

Asbury Defeats Farmington

In the first game with Asbury managed 15-4, Gary Harris lead the hitting with 3 hits. Mike Wamsley, Leroy Betts, Danny Hicks and Dave Welch each had 2 hits. Johnny Mumford and Jerry Finkbinder led the Farmington attack with 2 hits each.
