YOUTH KILLED AS CAR OVERTURNS ON FELTON ROAD

Johnson Robbins, of Laws Church, Dies as Car Skids on Slippery Road

BODY IN WATER-FILLED DITCH

T. Johnson Robbins, 18, of near Laws Church, was killed last night when an automobile he was driving crashed into a telephone pole on a curve of the Felton-Fredrica road, about two miles east of Felton.

His body was found lying in a ditch, partly submerged in water collected by the heavy rains. Raymond Stewart, of Felton, found Robbins and the damaged machine and notified authorities.

State police, investigating the accident, said Robbins' car apparently skidded or he lost control while rounding a turn in the highway, made slippery by the rains. He was thrown from the car.

William A. Berry, Felton undertaker, took charge of the body. Funeral arrangements have not been completed.

NOTICE OF SPECIAL SCHOOL ELECTION

In accordance with 2725, Section 103, the Revised Code of Delaware, 1935, the Board of Education of the Harrington Special School District will hold a special school election in the building of the Harrington Special School District on June 21, 1940, between the hours of 1:00 P. M. and 8:00 P. M., Eastern Standard Time, that being the usual place for holding school elections. The purpose of the said special election is to determine whether or not the Board of Education of said Special School District shall be authorized to issue bonds totaling $173,000 to provide improved school facilities for white children as follows: modern elementary school building of the same number of classrooms as are found in the present elementary school building, namely 13 classrooms, cafeteria and auxiliary rooms connected therewith, nurses quarters, a library, classrooms to replace the portable building which houses the agriculture department and the manual arts work shop and machine room and storage; the modernization of the present physical department with seating for spectators, storage, administration rooms and showers for boys and girls; and an auditorium.

The reasons for the proposed bond issue are:

1. To build an educational plant which will give to the children of the community additional school advantages and benefits;
2. To remove unhealthy and unsanitary conditions;
3. To conserve eyesight by the proper orientation of light;
4. To move the children from the old building which is a fire hazard;
5. To replace the portable buildings which are unfit for further use;
6. To properly house the cafeteria by moving it out of the old boiler room;
7. To avoid teaching in the cellar of the old building;
8. To enlarge the library which has outgrown its present quarters;
9. To supply a much needed sound-proof music room;
10. To supply showers and lockers which are not available at present;
11. To provide better seating facilities at entertainments and games.

The rate of interest for said bonds shall not exceed 3 1/2 pct.

Every citizen, male or female, resident of the Harrington Special School District, who would be entitled on June 21, 1940, to register and vote in any election district, of which said Special School District is a part, at a general election, shall be deemed to be a qualified voter and entitled to vote at such special school election regardless of whether he or she is at that time a registered voter or not.

HARRINGTON SPECIAL SCHOOL DISTRICT BOARD OF EDUCATION.

SENATOR SYLVESTER NAMED TO ACCIDENT BOARD POST

For the first time in many years, a Democrat from the Harrington territory has been given a major political plum by the Democratic party.

This unprecedented move occurred this week when Governor Richard C. McMullen appointed State Senator Earl Sylvester, of Harrington, to a place on the Industrial Accident Board to succeed Herman C. Taylor, who died about a month ago. Senator Sylvester is former commander of the Department of Delaware, American Legion and has long been active in the affairs of that organization.

ORCHARD SPRAY NOTES

Within the past few days the grape growers throughout Delaware received from the office of Kent County Agent ussell E. Wilson spray notes in regard to the importance of the pre-blossom and post-blossom sprays for the control of black rot and berry-moth, which should be made at the proper stages of vine growth in order to secure the most effective and satisfactory results.

These spray notes were prepared by Dr. T. F. Manns, plant pathologist and soil bacteriologist, and Dr. L. A. Stearns, entomologist, of the Delaware experiment station, and were distributed in cooperation with the State Board of Agriculture in the same manner as the various editions of orchard spray notes are being sent out from the county extension office to the apple and peach growers.

Bunsen Burner

THAT small gas burner the dentist has that makes things so hot so fast, is called a Bunsen burner. It consists of a straight tube with small holes at the bottom where air enters and mixes with the gas. The oxygen in the air causes the gas to burn with a hotter flame.

Your gas stove works the same way—there are air vents in the pipes that lead to the burners so that you are burning a mixture of gas and air, otherwise you wouldn't get much heat from the gas alone. It really doesn't make much difference where the holes are placed along the pipe—as long as they are this side of the meter.

Von Bunsen

But what we started out to say was, this burner is named after Robert Wilhelm von Bunsen, a German chemist who was born in 1811 and died in 1899. He was a professor of chemistry at Kassel in Breslau, and later at the famous university at Heidelberg.

P. S. Von Bunsen didn't invent the burner—either a man by the name of Peter Desaga or the famous Michael Faraday did. At least, it is known that both of them used the same type of burner before Von Bunsen.

Sanforizing

FOR the fact that your Adam's apple isn't in danger of being squeezed out of shape by a tight collar after your shirt has been laundered a few times, you can thank a 66-year-old native of Troy, N. Y.—Sanford L. Cluett. He was the inventor of a pre-shrinking process which is used to treat one-fifth of all the available fabrics in this country before they are made up into wearing apparel and which has added a new word to our everyday speech—sanforizing.

After the World War, American men, accustomed to khaki shirts, wanted to continue wearing soft collars. But they shrank after washing and no purchaser knew how much shrinkage to expect. Shirt manufacturers had shrinking machines but they didn't do the job completely and they had to allow three-quarters of an inch for shrinkage in each collar. The problem was to produce a uniformly shrunk fabric that would not change its size when given the average laundry wash.

In 1919 Cluett, a veteran of the Spanish-American war, an engineer and an inventor with a number of patents to his credit, joined the research department of the company of which his name is now a part. After a long series of experiments he finally produced in 1929 the process now known as sanforizing and all those devoted to wearing shirts with soft collars breathed easier, both figuratively and literally!

Nobel Prize

THERE'S more than a little irony in the fact that the most famous of all prizes for the person or organization who best serves the interests of world peace each year is paid out of a fund that had its origin in the sale of a product which adds to the horrors of war. Yet such is the case of the Nobel prize.

Alfred Bernhard Nobel, Swedish chemist and inventor, born in 1833, was educated in Russia and sent to America to study engineering. But within a year he returned to Europe to aid his father in developing military and naval mines and torpedoes. In 1862 he helped the elder Nobel in perfecting the manufacture of nitroglycerine, called "Nobel's blasting oil," and further research by the two led to the invention and commercial production of dynamite, originally known as "Nobel's ignites."

When Nobel died in Italy in 1896 he left a large fund, from the interest of which annual prizes were to be awarded achievements in various fields, including physics, science, chemistry, medicine and literature. But the most humanitarian, the Nobel peace prize, is paid from the profits of a "merchant of death."

THREE-DECKER PULLMAN BERTHS

We've had the three-decker sandwich and the three-decker bus and now we are about to get the three-decker railroad berth.

The Pullman company is turning out a combination coach-sleeper that will have the berths in three layers: lower, upper and stratosphere.

The new car will represent the combined talents of the railroad, the hotel, the trailer and the parlor-magic industries. Your chair is a railroad chair one moment and—presto!—a three-passenger boudoir the next.

Through the new car the Pullman company carries the art of concealing plumbing to new heights. There are almost as many fixtures hidden under one seat as you will find in most plumbers' supply windows.

The new car is a de luxe coach without the conventional center aisle. The aisle is now about three points to starboard. There are accommodations for 45 passengers. Nothing more than the appearance of the porter with a few mysterious motions is necessary to eliminate the seats and substitute the ground floor, mezzanine and terrace berths.

It has everything but elevator service between bunks.

When all three occupants desire to go to bed at once there is no problem. But it will become a matter for the American Railroad association, the RFC, the SEC and the sundry private and federal agencies when one man wants to turn in and the other two want to play rummy.

Elmer Twitchell's chief concern is that he will be in a lower on a rough road when two fellows in the uppers have breakfast in bed.

The modernization of railroad cars within the last few years has been amazing. So rapid has been the trend that when a man gets into an old-time railroad car today it is like climbing into a 1908 air-cooled Franklin roadster.

And what the roads have done to the dining cars is nobody's business.

They even have hostesses in 'em. She's the brunette who, when you enter all alone, holds up her index finger and asks, "One?" This shows how dizzy those diners are. We hope that whatever happens the roads don't put on three-decker diner tables.

Mussolini's attitude may be described as that of a man who is working hard for peace with both fists.

THE GULL AND THE EARTHQUAKE

A seagull, tired out from a long journey, flew toward land and lighted on a crag, but as it happened an earthquake occurred at that identical moment. To the dismay of the little bird the whole line of rocky cliffs seemed to tremble suddenly, lift upward and then collapse beneath him.

At this the gull flapped his wings and flew back to sea as fast as he could, screaming tragically: "See the evil thing I've done! . . . I lit on the crag for a moment, and as a result I've wrecked the whole coast line!"

His companions consoled him as best they could. "I don't think I'd take all the responsibility," they said gently. "There was an earthquake, too, you know."

EDUCATION FOR OUR ELDERLY

People are always writing articles on how to bring up children. Why doesn't someone get real courageous and write a book on how to bring up parents?

The other night "Moonlight Serenade" was being played on the radio, and do you know that my father didn't even know it was Glenn Miller's theme song? He doesn't even know what boogie-woogie music is. It doesn't seem to bother him at all.

Parents don't even know what simple words like jitterbug, icicle, and hepcat mean; and when you use such phrases as "in the groove" or "solid jive," they are bewildered. Their ignorance is appalling. They can't remember from one week to the next what numbers led on the hit parade. I venture that nine-tenths of them think "Rochester" is a city. And how many of them could tell you what happened to Flash Gordon last Sunday?

I just don't know what the older generation is coming to.

NOTHING ELSE SO DELICIOUS THAT'S SO GOOD FOR YOU!

See how oranges help!

Fully half our families are getting too little vitamins and minerals to feel their best, says the Department of Agriculture.

It's easy to get more of these essentials—merely by making oranges your family's summer refreshment!

Peel and eat them. Keep ready a big pitcher of fresh orangeade. Or better yet—Have big, 8-ounce glasses of fresh orange juice with breakfast daily. This gives you all the vitamin C you normally need. Adds vitamins A, B1 and C and the minerals calcium, phosphorus and iron.

Sunkist is sending you the pick of California's best-ever crop of wonderfully juicy summer oranges. Order a supply right away!

STAGE SCREEN RADIO

By VIRGINIA VALE
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

DOROTHY LAMOUR may have to remain in the sarong that made her famous, but Jon Hall has finally grabbed off a role that will enable him to wear regular clothes—the curse of “The Hurricane” has lifted for him, if not for her.

After his success among its winds and waves he was idle for two years. Then Producer Edward Small asked to borrow him for another South Seas picture, “South of Pago-Pago.” Near the end of shooting on it, Small was planning to film “Kit Carson,” and had already signed Randolph Scott for the leading role when Hall appeared at the studio one day wearing a ten gallon hat and a semi-cowboy outfit. He had a late call for work that day, and had spent the early morning hours riding with his wife, Frances Langford.

Small met Hall near the actor's dressing bungalow—and now it's Hall instead of Randolph Scott whom you'll see as Kit Carson.

In its latest issue, “The Philippines; 1898-1946,” the March of Time pictures the new problems facing the Philippines as a result of today's mounting war fever, and shows how Philippine independence, scheduled to take effect in 1946, is already threatened by Japan's current expansion program in the south Pacific.

It's been announced that Joan Blondell plans to retire from the screen indefinitely when she finishes “I Want a Divorce.” She has been suffering from severe colds and inertia for the past year, and says that she will travel throughout America with a road company, (a novel cure for both severe colds and inertia!) and later on will make an extended tour of South America for a change of climate.

Fred MacMurray has grown to be so expert at water polo that a company that makes short features has asked him to make one on the sport.

Felix Knight, starred on the airwaves’ “All Star Revue,” had a bad moment recently. After he had sung a medley of songs about the month of May, gardens and apple orchards, the Three Jesters strode up and down the aisles, tossing apples and other farm products to the audience. Knight swears he was scared to death for fear the fruit would be handed right back—hurting through the air straight at him.

If Columbia's Wayne King wanted to start up in the pipe tobacco business, he already has a large clientele all over the country. For 15 years he has been smoking his own private mixture, but he won't tell anyone what it is. It's the result of four years of experimenting. But though he won't give away the secret of the mixture, he does give away the tobacco—12 pounds of it a month. When he travels on personal appearance tours there's always a large can of it on his dressing table—so if his orchestra is playing in your town, and you know anyone who smokes a pipe, you might drop in and get some.

Deems Taylor, the music critic and composer who acts as master of ceremonies on “Musical Americana,” has a maid who delights in taking part in contests of all kinds. She was greatly excited recently when she was notified that she had qualified among the winners in a national contest, and couldn't wait to receive her prize. When it came it turned out to be an autographed copy of Taylor's latest book on music!

Bob Trout maintains that during those first few days after war really broke loose he averaged only two and one-half hours' sleep out of each 24, and could have floated a battleship on the amount of coffee he drank to keep awake. Newscasting isn't all that it's cracked up to be.

Republic has arranged to produce a picture starring Gene Autrey; the title will be “Melody Ranch”—same as his radio program—and several members of the radio cast will appear in the picture.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Since “Girl Alone” returned to the last fall three of the girls in the cast have married—apparently the title was a temptation to Cupid . . . Remember Anna Sien? She's been signed for an important role in “I Married a Nazi,” with Joan Bennett and Richard Greene . . . Claudette Colbert will make “Arise My Love,” a dramatic comedy laid in France at the outset of the current war, in which she will play a newspaper woman . . . Carl Hoff, musical director of the Al Pearce program, has a new “work room”—it's his cabin cruiser, and when he wants to work he just heads out to sea, establishes his wife as pilot, and gets busy.

WHEN YOU'RE PLANNING A MENU ESPECIALLY FOR MEN
(See Recipes Below)

Just between us women, we'll have to admit that, if left to his own devices, many a man would enjoy living on a straight diet of meat, potatoes and pie. It requires a little judicious scheming on Mother's part to supply Father with his favorite foods and provide for him a wholesome, well-balanced meal in the bargain.

Whether she's planning a menu to please the men folk in her family, or is chairman of the refreshment committee for the May meeting of the business men's club, it's a wise woman who remembers—and caters to—these masculine foibles in food.

Just how do a man's food preferences differ from those of women? Well, for one thing; a man wants plainer, more substantial food. He likes a meal to be composed of only a few dishes, but he wants those few to be tasty, full of flavor and cooked to a turn.

And he likes to know just what he's eating—he wants none of the “masked identity dishes” that defy him to find what they're composed of. In a word, fancy cooking is wasted on the average man, but he appreciates good cooking to the limit.

Remember that for most men, meat makes the meal; that hot breads are a masculine weakness that they themselves acknowledge; and that for dessert men have a special fondness for pie, or chocolate cake.

You'll find more suggestions for planning masculine menus in my booklet, “Feeding Father.” There are tested recipes, too, for over 125 of father's favorite foods.

Deep South Ham Sandwich With Hot Mushroom Sauce.

6 pieces corn bread, about 3 inches square
6 slices ham, boiled or baked
Mushroom Sauce:

1 can condensed cream of mushroom soup
½ cup milk

Stir the ½ cup of milk into the condensed cream of mushroom soup. Heat, but do not boil. While the sauce is heating, split the pieces of corn bread and toast them. Then place the ham between the toasted slices of corn bread and pour the hot mushroom sauce over the top.

Note: This is an excellent way to utilize left-over corn bread. If hot corn bread is used, we suggest the pieces be split and buttered, but not toasted.

My Best Chocolate Cake.

2 ounces bitter chocolate
¾ cup butter
1½ cups sugar
3 eggs
2½ cups cake flour
¼ teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons baking powder
1 cup milk
1 teaspoon vanilla extract

Melt chocolate carefully over warm water. Cream butter thoroughly and add sugar slowly. Separate eggs, beat egg yolks, and add to butter and sugar mixture. Add the melted chocolate. Mix and sift together the flour, salt, and baking powder and add alternately with the milk and vanilla extract. Beat egg whites until stiff and fold into the

Garden Not Always for Pure Delight

By ELIZABETH MacRAE BOYKIN

A lady's garden in the once-upon-a-time was more than a place to retire with her embroidery frame and her dreams . . . more than a place to meet her lover . . . more even than a place of pure delight to get for becoming armloads of cut flowers. Here it was that she, in ruff or farthingale, in hoop skirt or bustle, looked for medicinal, selecting herbs and roots and flowers and preparing remedies from them—conserves of roses, poppy water, mint and rue-water, walnut cordial, cinnamon water, essence of cloves, gilliflower and lemon water, spirit of ambergris.

For doctoring in those days was largely a woman's business, and she was quite learned about the medicinal properties of her flowers and herbs. We hear a lot about how much time the woman of old spent over her tapestry, but little is said of the time spent in her “still room,” which was in reality the family pharmacy. This was where she kept cake mixture. Place in 2 well-greased, 8-inch layer cake pans. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) for approximately 30 to 35 minutes.

Next week in this column Eleanor Howe will give you some clever suggestions for entertaining a June bride. There'll be a menu and tested recipes, too, for a “Kitchen Shower”—and hints on what to give the bride.

Corn Bread.
(Serves 6-8)

1½ cups yellow (or white) corn meal (uncooked)
½ cup general purpose flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup milk
2 eggs (beaten)
2 tablespoons fat (melted)

Sift the corn meal with the flour, baking powder and salt. Combine the milk, eggs, and shortening and add to the dry ingredients. Bake in a well-greased 8-inch square baking pan, in a moderately hot oven (400 degrees) for 40 to 50 minutes.

Garden Salad Bowl.

1 head lettuce
1 cucumber, peeled and sliced
1 green pepper, cut in thin rings
3 fresh tomatoes, cut in wedge-shaped pieces
1 bunch radishes, sliced
Roquefort cheese dressing

Prepare and chill vegetables thoroughly. Line salad bowl with large crisp leaves of lettuce and shred remaining lettuce rather coarsely. Place all vegetables in salad bowl and toss together with a well-seasoned dressing. Serve at once.

Welsh Rarebit.

1 pound sharp American cheese
2 tablespoons butter
1 cup cream
2 eggs
2 teaspoons worcestershire sauce
½ teaspoon paprika
Salt and pepper to taste
½ teaspoon dry mustard

Cut cheese in small pieces and place it together with the butter in the top of a double boiler. Melt slowly. Then add cream, eggs (well beaten) and seasonings. Cook, stirring constantly, until mixture has thickened. Serve on hot buttered toast.

Hot Muffins.

2 cups general purpose flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons sugar
1 egg
1 cup milk or water
2 tablespoons shortening, melted
Mix and sift dry ingredients, add unbeaten egg, milk or water and melted shortening. Mix quickly. Pour into well-greased muffin tins, and bake in hot oven (450 degrees) 20 minutes.

To Please the Men Folk in Your Family.

From the brand new bride, to grandmother, aren't most of us cooking largely to please Father? Eleanor Howe's booklet, “Feeding Father,” is one every homemaker needs in her file. It's full of tested recipes for the foods that Father likes best—and will give you masculine menu hints, as well.

FARM TOPICS

FARM GROUNDS NEED ATTENTION

Trees and Shrubs Provide Best Landscaping Aids.

By JOHN H. HARRIS

(Extension Landscape Specialist, North Carolina State College.)

Farmers and city people have different problems in beautifying their homes. In the city or town, space usually is limited, but long summer evenings allow time for the attention to annual and perennial plants that offer most flowers for the least space.

On the farm, rush seasons in the fields mean long hours and little leisure at the very time flower gardens may be most in need of weeding, cultivating, and watering. But the grounds around the farm home are usually ample for more of the ornamental trees and shrubs than those of the town dweller.

These two sharp differences are worth considering when the farm family considers plantings to improve the home grounds. Planting a few shrubs each season, and adding a few more from time to time will soon make the home more attractive, and will conserve time in busy seasons.

Shrubs and trees will need good care and watering for two or three seasons, but after that, if they are well selected, good woody plants will practically take care of themselves. What work is needed can be done at odd times and when farm work is slack.

Drouth Years Favored Weed Rivals of Crops

The “weed problem” on American farms has changed radically in the last generation, according to L. W. Kephart, in charge of weed research in the federal bureau of plant industry. From concern over cultivation of annual weeds in tilled crops, interest has shifted chiefly to the “noxious weeds,” mainly perennials which have been spreading alarmingly.

Fifteen years ago the notorious weed areas did not greatly exceed 1,000,000 acres, Kephart estimates. Now these weeds have “taken” about 6,000,000 acres of good farmland west of the Mississippi, with crop production checked or prevented, not only on single farms, but in whole townships.

Two factors have played a great part in this spread, Kephart finds. Since 1930 an unusual series of dry years has proved extra favorable for seed production by the weeds. Economic depression increased farm tenancy and a general let-down in farm care. “The indications are,” says Kephart, “that the present situation will not greatly improve and that noxious weeds will continue to increase, unless vigorous measures are taken to combat them.”

The situation has roused many farmers. The federal seed law has been made more effective. Thirteen states have adopted new laws or revised old laws on weed control, and eight states are co-operating with the bureau of plant industry in weed-control research.

U. S. Wheat Insurance Is Expanded in 1940

Wheat growers of the nation took more than two and one-third times as much “all-risk” crop insurance for 1940 as for 1939, the Federal Crop Insurance corporation reports. Increased grower interest swelled the number of contracts in force from 166,000 in 1939 to almost 380,000 in 1940. These are estimated to cover 11,000,000 acres, insuring farmers of income from at least 100,000,000 bushels of production.

There was increased enrollment in 1940 for all but two states in which insurance was offered. The greatest increase occurred in the major winter wheat states, where in 1939 growers did not have an opportunity to make use of advances from Agricultural Adjustment administration payments to finance premiums. Nebraska and Kansas both registered more than a 300 per cent increase, Nebraska going from 13,000 contracts in 1939 to almost 57,000 in 1940, and Kansas from 15,000 to 60,500.

Pennsylvania leads in crop insurance in the eastern winter wheat area with 5,900 growers in the program, an increase of 153 per cent. In the Far West, Idaho leads with 6,836 contracts, an increase of 325 per cent.

Straw Erosion Control

If you have an old straw stack which you don't need for feed or for any other purpose, don't burn it, or just let it stand out in the field. You can make good use of the straw for erosion control. Straw—as well as pine needles, leaves and other mulch materials—can be made to save your soil. Soil savers have a pat slogan for gully control: “Seed it, fertilize it, mulch it and watch the grass choke the gully to death.” The idea is worth trying.

Use Good Sires

The surest and quickest way to develop a herd of cows bred for high production is to use a succession of good proved bulls. This is the conclusion of the federal bureau of dairy industry after 21 years of experimental work in breeding dairy cattle. Since the work was started, five proved sires have been used in a Holstein-Friesian herd managed by the bureau. In each generation but one butterfat yields have increased.

Allies Stage Big Counter-Attack In Attempt to Check Nazi Drive; Senate Passes Huge Army Bill

(EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst and not necessarily of this newspaper.)
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

Because they fear invasion of Great Britain by the advancing German forces, English officials are taking concrete steps to defend their homeland. In the above picture, beyond-war-age veterans of the last World war are shown receiving equipment and arms to be used against parachute troops that might be dropped from the sky. While the younger men are fighting beside the French on the continent these older men are guarding vulnerable spots throughout England.

THE WAR: Revised Edition

On the fields of northern France and Belgium the story of 1914-18 continued to unfold itself in new, grim and bloody chapters.

This time the forces of Adolf Hitler were playing the leading German role as they made their bid for Paris, capital of France and for ports on the English channel, gateway to Britain. For a time as these forces battled their way through The Netherlands, across Belgium, into France, it looked that there would be no stopping them until they decided to write the final chapter themselves. Even the dispatches from the allied war camps told of the constant advances made by the invading legions.

Jittery, harassed and worried, the British-French war council switched control of the army to Gen. Maxime Weygand, former commander of the French army in the Near East. Veteran of the World war, General Weygand swung into action with a dramatic plane dash across German lines, a return trip to Paris and the issuance of an order to launch an immediate counter-attack. Directing this new move—the first major attack of the allies—with all the vigor for which he is famous and respected, he was successful in stalling the German machine, for a short time at least.

Two important key points near the channel, Arras and Abbeville, were reportedly retaken from the Nazis. Soon word came through, however, that the Germans were pounding at the gates of Calais—which is only 26 miles across the Strait of Dover from England.

This fight for the channel ports may well be the most decisive battle of the current conflict. For as long as the English and French control the channel they are really "united." Should these ports fall into Nazi hands, however, Hitler would be in an excellent position to launch his threatened air and land attack on Britain—at home.

Waiting

Evidence that England was worried and preparing for such an at-

HEADLINERS ... in the news

Shadows of Frederick the Great fall from the person of Adolf Hitler in the opinion of his henchman, Field Marshal Goering. In Berlin on a short visit from the fighting front, he compared Hitler to Frederick and pictured him as a master military strategist.

From Boston came word that Senator Bridges (Rep., N. H.) had declared that city to be overrun with Nazi bundsmen and he called upon President Roosevelt to clean up this "fifth column" before proceeding with the national defense program. And another senator, this one from Massachusetts itself—Senator Lodge (Republican)—came a suggestion that the United States regular army be increased to a standing force of 750,000 men. He figures the present goal of 280,000 men will be reached by fall.

Changing horses in the middle of a stream isn't such bad business, according to Wendell L. Willkie, candidate for the Republican presidential nomination. He voiced this theory in a political speech in which he assailed the New Deal for what he termed "failure" to defend the United States "against itself" and further charged that it could not be trusted (in a third term) to defend the nation from outside aggression. His speech was made at a Republican rally in Somerville, N. J., on the eve of that state's primary election.

Bishop James Cannon Jr. of the Methodist church made public an open letter to Secretary of State Hull in which he urged Hull's "great influence with the President and congress to declare war against Hitler and his fellow monsters."

Another religious leader, Msgr. Fulton J. Sheen, nationally known radio speaker and professor of philosophy at Catholic university, voiced the opinion that wars "come every now and then to make people realize upon what a false philosophy they have rounded their lives."

tack was apparent on every hand. Winston Churchill, prime minister, was given a virtual dictator's power over all phases of English life.

Every resource of the nation was being mustered to resist the attack that was in the offing. While the government's power to press the war across the channel was being approved, internal defense measures were also being substantially strengthened. Beyond-war-age veterans of the last war were being equipped with arms to aid in battling parachute troops or other invading forces.

In 2 hours and 50 minutes the parliament passed legislation giving the government control to mobilize all cash, property, labor, agriculture and industry. It was a totalitarian measure designed to meet the totalitarian Germany on even ground. The drastic action was necessary, the government said, because the war had reached the stage where every available resource had to be used to wage the fight against the enemy.

U. S. DEFENSE: In the Groove

President Roosevelt's request for immediate action in speeding up activity on the U. S. home defense front is meeting with widespread approval. What is even more important, definite action is taking place.

At the senate passed a record peacetime army supply bill, calling for expenditure of $1,823,000,000, by a 74 to nothing vote, Jesse Jones, federal loan administrator, was telling U. S. business men that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation's huge credit resources were virtually at their command for any expansion which would aid the defense program.

Full credit backing to American business enlisting in the defense drive came as Jones, head of the RFC, called on the country's banks to give "fullest co-operation" in all loans of this type and his lending agency would underwrite them in the amount of 75 per cent.

From Detroit, center of the nation's automobile industry, came word that spare plant capacity of that industry may be utilized to speed arms production. Army and navy technical experts have visited Detroit and have completed detailed studies on how these plants may be used. It is understood that the war department has in its files mobilization plans for the industry should need arise for a hurried production of fighting tools and equipment.

The 74 to nothing vote which the senate gave to the President in passing the army supply bill indicates the manner in which that body has swung behind the "preparedness" plea. This bill provides for a full peacetime army of 280,000 men, about 10,000 planes, tons of munitions, thousands of guns and a "blank check" in the amount of $132,000,000, for the President to spend as he sees fit in building up the army.

Sour Note

Principal sour note in the general approval (see above) which was greeting the administration's policy of improving national defense, was sounded by Col. Charles A. Lindbergh in a speech in which he minimized the air peril to the United States. While he urged an adequate defense program Lindbergh criticized the present administration by saying that our recent policy "leads to neither strength, friendship nor peace."

MONEY: Hard Cash

About 70 per cent of the world's monetary supply of gold—some $19,000,000,000—has now found its way into the U. S. treasury. Current figures released by the treasury department indicate that gold purchases by the federal government have gone up sensationally in the last year ($4,000,000,000) because of foreign purchases and because foreign nations have been sending it here for safe-keeping.

'Fifth Column'

... what it means

"Outside the gates of Madrid four columns of our troops are engaged. But within there is a fifth column, which, at the proper time, will arise and overthrow the defenders."

Since the day that the Spanish rebel general Quiepo de Llano, made that now famous remark regarding the "fifth column" the term has been used to refer to all those residents (citizens or aliens) of a nation at war or faced with the possibility of war at some future date, who act or speak in a fashion that may in some way aid the enemy or possible enemy.

Such aid to the "enemy" may come in many different ways. It may mean sabotage or disclosing military secrets. Most striking examples of "fifth column" activity usually come however, as the troops of the enemy are marching into the home country. The "fifth column" is already there and has placed itself in key positions to aid the advancing troops.

Thus far, it is claimed, the German forces have successfully used these tactics in Denmark, Norway, Holland and Belgium. "Fifth columnists" may or may not be citizens of the country in which they reside. They filter into the nation in times of peace as students, tourists, workmen, refugees or any guise which is not apt to be alarming.

AGRICULTURE:

No Acreage Cut

Further reduction in the acreage of major U. S. farm crops has been decided against.

According to Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace. After discussing the current farm surplus situation with President Roosevelt the secretary announced that the impact of the European war was making a profound effect upon American agriculture. He said that because of the war future emphasis should be upon increasing domestic consumption and storage of crops against future needs.

Exports of U. S. farm products have been sharply curtailed because of the German invasion of Norway, Denmark, Belgium and The Netherlands, as these markets have been cut off. These two the allies have diverted much of their agricultural buying to their own colonies.

SEN. HIRAM JOHNSON—He's been in the Senate since the last World war and is "still going strong."

000,000 in appropriations to pay for an expanded army, navy, marine corps, shipbuilding plants, munition plants, gun production, etc.

Mr. Roosevelt foresaw desperate need for these things and he told congress to speed up these appropriations. According to the President's view of the conditions that our nation faces, fast enemy airplanes can reach Kansas City or St. Louis—the heart of America—before we can do anything about it. Moreover, parachutists from enemy planes might drop in, most any day now, and start taking over our cities and towns and countryside. The fact is that Mr. Roosevelt made Europe's war appear so close to Washington that we really may expect to hear bombs exploding almost any minute.

In view of all of these things, Mr. Roosevelt thought we ought to have approximately 50,000 airplanes, and build them tonight or tomorrow.

President's Request Added To Regular Appropriations

The vast sum for which the President asked is in addition to about $3,276,000,000 in appropriations that were requested for the military services in the regular annual appropriation bills for the fiscal year that begins on July 1, 1940. He assured congress there was no overlapping of items. This was all new stuff; it represented the best thought of what ought to be done to meet the challenge of Hitler's legions.

As Hitler's legions overran Holland and Belgium, the war fever of Washington hit a new high. It had started up when the German dictator went into Norway. Naturally, the temperature increased when the awful forces of the Hitler machine were turned loose in the Low Countries.

MISCELLANY:

¶ In California, the Imperial valley suffered a series of fairly severe earth shocks. At least eight persons were killed and supplies of water were cut off in six cities. Estimates of property loss ran to about $3,000,000.

¶ Possibility of a shortage of steel supplies in the United States was reported by the magazine Iron Age. Pointing out that the war-generated demand was causing reserve supplies to decline rapidly, it was said the pinch would be felt in midsummer.

¶ Times square, New York city, witnessed a clash of several thousand Communists and their sympathizers with police as a "peace demonstration" was attempted. Marching two abreast the demonstration blocked traffic on Broadway and the police were called to maintain order.

¶ In Georgia, Gov. E. D. Rivers signed a proclamation ordering all aliens in that state to register with nearest police officials and be fingerprinted. Similar demands were made by various communities scattered throughout the nation.

¶ Frequency modulation, hailed by radio engineers as a method of broadcasting which gives "bell-like clarity" to sound, was given the go-sign by the government as the Communications commission set aside 40 channels for transmission of the new method. For some time this permission has been held back as it was feared that present receiving sets would immediately become obsolete. Now it is explained that regular broadcasting will continue and the new development will only gradually make its inroads in the industry.

Washington Stirs With War Talk As Defense Plan Takes Shape

President Roosevelt Asks Congress for Billion Dollar Military Appropriation in Addition to Regular Annual Grants for Army and Navy.

By WILLIAM BRUCKART
WNU Service, National Press Bldg.,
Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON.—I shall try, in this article, to provide you with a picture of your national capital during the last few weeks. It is a situation, a condition that, in general, gives rise to very little pride. But the facts must be faced, for in this capital city things have happened that can best be described as the screaming and play-panic of children playing cops and robbers. Only, of course, the screams were screams of men and women in places of official responsibility and the panicky outbursts and orders were the excited and unbalanced procedure of leaders in public and private life.

In the midst of this period which I am attempting to describe came President Roosevelt's voice, heard over the din of the others because the President and his office are respected. He drove to the Capitol building and there, before a joint assembly of senate and house, he asked for new national defense measures, and he asked for $1,196-blared forth in loud tones the learned wisdom of a statesman. It shouted to the world that the United States of America must do everything it can to help the allies. Yes, we must supply money! And so, Senator Austin argued for repeal of that so-called Johnson Act.

Now, it may be remembered that Senator "Hi" Johnson of California fought and fought until he was able to convince congress that none of the foreign nations who had not paid their debts should be allowed to borrow any more money in the United States. The California senator is one of seven men now in the senate who were there during the first World war, and he is still going strong.

No Payment on War Debts Has Been Made Recently

The law that he forced through congress, almost single handed, was a good law when it was passed. It is a better law today, considering that those nations which we helped by men and billions of dollars are involved again in a war to save democracy. And, incidentally, they have paid nothing on their debts in the last 10 or 12 years, so that they still owe around $13,500,000,000.

Lights have been burning late in the war and navy offices. Mr. Roosevelt worked one night until two o'clock in the morning. That was while he was preparing his defense speech. Even the gambling spirit is around. One can get bets in the capital city that we will be mixed up in Europe's war, and the dates that are offered range anywhere from a few weeks to next winter.

And the politicians! Yes, they are busy about the thing, also. The "inner circle" and the third term advocates are smiling with that self-satisfied appearance that goes with a knowledge that they have gained ground. Privately, many of them will say that the nearness of the war makes certain that Mr. Roosevelt will be elected for a third term. They are sure the country will not dare to change horses in the middle of the stream, not even if France and England did change their principal leaders. Mr. Roosevelt will have to remain on the job because his two terms give him a great advantage in dealing with these foreign problems, they are saying.

'He Kept Us Out of War' Is Now Being Revisited

And dear Mr. Secretary Wallace of the department of agriculture. He couldn't get in on the excitement any other way, apparently. So, in his keynote speech to the Iowa Democratic state convention, he announced that Mr. Roosevelt had kept this nation out of war. That was his tribute, but immediately there were a good many persons able to recall a similar slogan from back about 1916 when it was used with great effectiveness.

All through these days that I have sought to describe as a steady stream of bad news from Europe—bad news for all of us who want to see the allies (or anybody else who can do it) knock Hitler and his gang into smithereens. The United States is pro-ally. Of that there is no doubt. The Hitler drives into Holland and Belgium have made it certain that few supporters of Hitler dare assert themselves in this country. But I have a hunch that allied censorship has been opened somewhat in order that we, here in the United States, can get the full impact of the slaughter, rape and arson being committed by the German legions. I say it is just a hunch. You see, it might be possible after all that the allies would like to have us in the war on their side to pay their bills and have our soldiers killed, again.

Anyway, this whole thing gripes me beyond expression. It is disgusting to see activities that were hardly equalled in the midst of the World war. It is more disgusting to listen to talk that represents perfection in lack of balanced thinking.

There is no doubt at all that our army and our navy are far below par. That is to say, this nation has nothing like the necessary or proper defense structure that a great nation must have. But if there is to be preparations against enemies, why neglect enemies within our gates. If we face the facts, it must be admitted that we have "fifth column" dangers within the boundaries of America, dangerous "fifth columns."

I have written in these columns before that Chairman Dies of the special house committee was doing a great job in ferreting out the groups in the United States that would destroy our government. I have written likewise that Mr. Dies was fought at every turn from within the administration which is of the same Democratic political faith as he. So, it strikes me that preparation must include defense against the "fifth column" of our nation as well as the "fifth columns" and the guns of other nations.

Before the President's speech, there were such sour songs as that sung by Senator Austin of Vermont, assistant Republican leader in the senate. Mr. Austin rose gravely in his place in the senate and there

WAR TALK
William Bruckart isn't very proud of the way in which government officials in Washington have become so excited about the danger of U. S. involvement in Europe's war. He sees no reason for panic. This is a time for balanced thinking and not mudslinging. Enemies within our gates or the "fifth column" should receive special attention, according to Bruckart.

Postoffice Urges Permanent

WASHINGTON.—The postoffice department recommended to congress, after one year's experimentation, that "pickup" airmail service between cities and outposts flights between metropolitan post offices and airfields be established permanently.

In 1938 congress adopted a resolution asking that experiments be made and a report submitted. W. W. Howes, first assistant postmaster general, said the tests demonstrated conclusively that both types of service could provide improved airmail facilities and recommended such flights be authorized by congress.

Planes equipped to pick up and deliver mail while in flight were operated during the past year over two routes serving 59 cities in Pennsylvania, Delaware, West Virginia, and Ohio, Howes reported.

Got Any Good Numbers?

About this time last year gold fish were poking tentative noses out of their glass bowls. Just drawing to a close was the season in which campus reputations were made and lost by ability to swallow the greatest number of goldfish. This year all sorts of campus fads have been breaking out, most of which will be carried home for the summer. Just for instance—

This pretty coed at the University of Rochester goes in for collecting good numbers on miniature license tags of her boy friends. The tags are secured through tire dealers and campus queens are judged by the numbers they wear.

Boston college was one of the first to go in for goldfish swallowing on a large scale.

At Southern Methodist it's the fad to collect autographs on your sport shirt.

Some of our rising young freshmen even go in for munching phonograph records of their favorite orchestra leaders. Most munchers were content with "swing" melodies; others demanded a "diet" of classical records.

And this pretty miss displays something new in coed hats, using her license plates for a hat band.

It looks like Fido will have a hard time keeping his collar in place. Above: At the University of Missouri coeds have started a fad of wearing dog collars for belts.

At San Jose State, Jack Baldwin started a kissing derby.

Most Spanish Spot

The most Spanish spot under the American flag is the romantic city of Ponce, on the southern coast of the United States territory of Puerto Rico. Although Ponce was the first city to be entered by the Americans who took Puerto Rico in 1898, it has been the last to give up the Latin heritage it derived from its Conquistadores. English is spoken widely in Puerto Rico, but Spanish is the prevailing language in this stronghold of old Castille.

Counting the Miles

One of the forerunners of the cyclometer on the dashboard of every auto was a contraption known as the "roadmeter." It consisted of a device that counted the revolutions of a wagon wheel and was invented by one of the Mormon leaders on the long trek of his sect to Utah. One of the duties of the inventor was to multiply the number of revolutions by the circumference of the wheel to estimate the distance traveled each day.

two keys to a cabin by Lida Larrimore

SYNOPSIS

Charming, wealthy Gabriella (Gay for short) Graham, engaged to Todd Janeway, returns to a cabin in the Maine woods accompanied by a friend, Kate Oliver. The idea of a stay at the cabin occurred to her when she received a key to it following the death of her godfather, Uncle John Lawrence. The two girls notice that someone is living in the cabin. Kate suspects that Gay knows the identity of the mysterious occupant. The mystery man returns. He is John Houghton, a young doctor whom Gay had known in previous years. Immediately aggressive, Gay asks him by what right he is in the cabin. His right, she finds, is greater than her own. He, too, possesses a key, but more than that, is heir to it from his Uncle John, Gay's godfather. Gay is high handed with him, and he states courteously that he will leave.

"I had no thought of finding you, John," said Gay. "I know that." He had, she thought, interpreted her statement as a rebuff. The smile vanished. "I'm sorry to be a complication." He was a complication. He had been a complication since the night they'd driven together through Central Park, before that, even, since the summer here at the lake. She realized, now, how largely he'd been responsible for her dissatisfaction, her restlessness, her uncertainty concerning her approaching marriage to Todd. A complication? That was too unimportant a word. Looking at John, silent and unapproachable in the doorway, feeling his presence here in every tingling nerve, with every racing heartbeat, Gay knew she had found the answer to troubling questions. He was necessary to her, had always been, since she was fifteen years old. Todd was not a necessity. It was as simple, as hopelessly, frighteningly involved as that.

CHAPTER III

He'd have to clear out. He'd have to clear out, now, tonight, before he saw her again. John walked, restless, in long plunging strides, along the rutted clay-shell road. The experiment was less important than what was certain to happen to him if he remained at the cabin. He'd fought that battle twice before, and he had no intention of exposing himself to the necessity of fighting it again.

But wasn't that necessity already upon him? He'd wondered how he would feel if, by chance, he should meet her again. Chance, assisted by Uncle John, had given him that knowledge. He felt as he'd felt when they parted six years ago. There was something between them which time and separation had not altered, more vital than it had been three years, six years ago, because they were more mature, now, more emotionally aware.

Not that he hadn't been emotionally aware of her that summer she'd spent at the cabin with Uncle John. He should have cleared out then, he told himself a trifle grimly, instead of prolonging what he had intended to be a week-end visit into a stay of three weeks.

He should have left before the day she'd taken her ankle walking with him through the woods and he'd carried her to the cabin in his arms. After that nothing could have induced him to leave. He remembered with a feeling of tenderness for the innocent ardor of their relationship which resentment could not efface, the week which had followed. He remembered saying good-bye to her at the station in Machias, straining for a last glimpse of her face, young and defenseless in the transient grief of parting, tears glittering on her lashes, her wide sweetly curved mouth trembling in an effort to smile. "I'll see you soon, John," she'd said, clinging to his hand as they stood together in the vestibule of the train. And, sustained by his presence, too much in love with her to reason or question, "Yes, very soon," he'd replied.

But he had not seen her again until he'd gone with Uncle John to New York for her debutante party. Her mother had taken her abroad that fall after her summer here. She'd written to him at lengthening intervals during the first year, from Geneva where she was in school, from various points on the French Riviera when her vacations permitted opportunities for travel. He'd been relieved when the letters stopped coming, glad that he had been on a canoe trip in Canada when, nearly two years later, the cablegram announcing her return to America had arrived, glad, too, though he'd watched the mail for weeks, that she had not answered his formal note of apology and explanation. It had been easier, then, to close a door in his mind, for reason, during long hours of logical if rebellious thought, had convinced him that the door must be closed and locked and the key thrown away.

The key? John turned, realizing that he had reached the village. Why had Uncle John made that gesture? he wondered, walking more slowly back toward the cabin. He'd known, of course, of that young attachment between himself and Gay. It probably hadn't been difficult for Uncle John to read his thoughts the morning after the party in New York when he, John, had insisted, stubbornly and not very considerately, that they return to Cambridge at once. And Uncle John loved Gay. He had for her a deeper affection, perhaps, than for anyone in the world except him.

But Uncle John should have foreseen, he thought irritably, that nothing of lasting value could come of that attachment. He was romantic, idealistic, in the way of his generation, but he was neither sentimental nor impractical. He must have seen that he, John, and Gabriella Graham lived in different worlds, that each would be a stranger in the atmosphere familiar to the other. Perhaps though, the thought continued, when you were dying, such things as wealth or a lack of it, the differences in viewpoint which wealth engendered, the distinctions and antagonisms it raised seemed relatively unimportant. Uncle John had known he hadn't long to live when they'd gone to New York. Perhaps during the following weeks, when his grasp on living had loosened, some wisdom had come to him which, by the gesture, he had attempted to communicate to them.

Perhaps—but the wisdom which might come with death was, now, of no practical value. He and Gay had, in all probability, a great deal of living to do. Their divergent courses were charted, had been determined, he supposed, long before they met here at the lake. That meeting was accidental and had no influence upon the direction of their separate lives. He was going to Portland to take over Dr. Sargeant's practice for a year in payment for loans which had enabled him to complete his medical course at Harvard. After that, if he could manage to support himself, he was going on with scientific research. There were before him years of work which he loved, of loneliness which he accepted. Gay was to marry Todd Janeway.

He had not allowed himself to think of that until now. His thoughts had moved warily, dodging that painful fact. But it must be faced, squarely and honestly. The fact must be accepted and removed from his mind. He'd known, of course, almost as soon as the engagement had been announced. He'd thought he had accepted it. He'd been able, during the summer, to look at camera poses of Gay and Todd Janeway with interest not too intolerably mixed with pain. There had been a great many of them. It would be an important wedding. Todd Janeway was connected with the private bank in New York of which his father was president. The Janeway estate on the Hudson adjoined "Dunedin," the Graham estate. It was all eminently suitable, he supposed. He'd met young Janeway at Gay's party and had been impressed with his friendly manner and blond good looks. Oh yes, it was eminently suitable. Gay's destiny, determined at her birth, an eventuality which no chance meeting could alter or efface.

"You're being pretty stuffy about this, aren't you?" she asked.

The cigarette he had lit and neglected had burned his fingers. The smart of physical pain routed memories, brought him abruptly to his senses. What he'd been thinking was madness. Uncle John had not intended them to have a stolen week together, hidden away in the woods. And he'd been presumptuous in assuming that Gay had any such thought or desire. Besides, there was Miss Oliver—

No, not too presumptuous, reverting to Gay's possible thought and desire. He'd seen the expression in her eyes when she'd looked at him through the lamplight. There was no sane middle-course of friendship for them. At a word, a gesture, the antagonism which was their safeguard would melt and with more far-reaching consequences, now, perhaps, than in the past, since now they met as a man and a woman and would never meet again.

His resolution wavered as he opened the door into the kitchen. Knowing that she was there seemed to give the door she had opened an especial significance. He felt her presence in the atmosphere of the kitchen and more materially in the perfume that filled the air with a fading scent. A light burned in the living-room. He would not go in there. He passed the door with his face averted. And then he heard her voice calling his name. He turned, disconcerted, incensed at having his resolution so unexpectedly frustrated, immensely and joyfully relieved.

"Hello," he said from the doorway. "I thought you were asleep." "I am—almost." She sat curled against heaped cushions in a corner of the couch beside the hearth. She wore a soft white woolen robe fastened close up around her throat with long sleeves and a cord knotted about her waist. The light from the lamp fell upon her loosened mop of red-brown hair, lay warmly against the curve of her cheek. She smiled up at him drowsily, an overture of friendliness in her long very deep blue eyes.

"You should be in bed." He walked to the fireplace in which a log she had evidently placed there burned above a bed of embers. "Are you warm enough? It's cool here at night."

"It's heavenly. New York has been a blazing furnace." "The papers report a heat wave." He bent over the log on the andiron, making a clattering noise with the tongs.

"It's been really dreadful." "So I've understood." She laughed suddenly, disarming. "Must we talk about the weather?" she asked.

He rose to a standing position, stood looking down at her, unable to resist the appeal of her smile. "You suggest a subject," he said. "I'm afraid I lugged in the heat-wave." The smile slowly vanished. "I've been thinking of Uncle John," she said. "I was terribly sorry not to have come for his funeral."

"It was pretty ghastly. The college turned out. You were fortunate to have escaped it."

"But I would have come. I was in Bermuda."

"Yes, I know." He walked to the side of the hearth opposite to the couch, rested his elbow on the low stone shelf, stood looking down at her through the smoke of his cigarette. "You wrote me."

"Dad cabled. I couldn't have made it." Her eyes moved slowly, a little sadly around the room. "It's strange to be here without him."

"I've become accustomed to it. I've been here half a dozen times in the past three years."

"Kate told me I shouldn't have assumed that he left me this." Reviving humor glinted between her thick dark lashes. "She pointed out a few things I'd overlooked, that there would have been a deed, a transfer of property, tax bills."

"Uncle John's estate pays the taxes. There has been a transfer of property. The estate—there's very little—is held in trust for my mother during her life-time. At her death it reverts to my sisters and to me."

"Then I am—intruding?" she said uncertainly. "The cabin is—yours?"

"Not entirely, apparently. Not for an uncertain number of years."

"I've been wondering. That's why I waited up to talk to you. I'm afraid you've been bearing some expense which I should have shared. After all, my option—is that the word?—should entail responsibility as well as create privilege. Do I owe you anything?"

"Certainly not," he said a trifle brusquely. "But the expense of taxes and upkeep must cut into your mother's income," she persisted.

"There's a special fund for the maintenance of the property."

"But that's hardly fair, is it?" she asked impulsively. "That fund might be added to your mother's income if some other arrangement was made. Why can't I help? If Uncle John intended me to have the privilege of coming here whenever I like, certainly you shouldn't object to my sharing the expense."

"That's quite unnecessary," he said stiffly and saw her expression change. She hesitated, he knew, interpreted the words the tone of his voice, as a rebuff. And rightly, too, he thought in bitter self-reproach. Her offer had been fair and generous. Why couldn't he have accepted it in the spirit in which it was made?

Presently, with a gesture which expressed some thought completed, she dropped the fringed end of the cord. As he watched her, still broodingly silent, she rose from the couch, composed, lovely, remote.

"Then I shall be obliged to stay as your guest," she said and walked toward the closed door into the room she was to share with Kate.

"You win again, Gay." Strange that it was less difficult to renew his resolution now that he realized he'd been a presumptuous fool. Odd that now, when her manner expressed indifference, he was impatient to go. "I won't be here. I'm leaving—" But flinging off at this hour was unnecessarily dramatic and so he added, "—tomorrow."

"You're being pretty—stuffy about this, aren't you?" she asked.

"Possibly." The knowledge of what he had seen in her face was sustaining. He felt himself relaxing as though, by some agency, a strain had been relieved. "Worse than that," he continued responding to the humor and the friendliness in her smile. "I'm being, I've been, unpardonably rude."

"You have," she agreed cheerfully. "I understand, though. The shock was, is, natural. We're neither of us behaved very well. Let's not make—decisions tonight."

"But my decision is made."

He knew that his voice lacked conviction. He saw her smile widen and deepen.

She appeared to be satisfied. "Shocks are wearing," she said. "I'm going to get some sleep."

"You'd better. You look all in."

"Thank you. Aren't you afraid you'll turn my head?" She stood smiling back over her shoulder, her hand on the knob of the door. "Good-night."

"Good-night. Pleasant dreams."

"I know I shall have them. Remember. No decisions. We'll draw Kate's straws—tomorrow."

Gay lay on the floor in front of the cabin, her face buried in the hollow between her crossed arms. The sun shone warmly on her back and legs and the wind, ruffling her hair, was refreshingly cool. The boat moved gently, rocked by waves which hurried before the wind across the surface of the lake. The warmth, the gentle motion, the whispering sound of the water, induced a state of drowsy contentment. She found it increasingly difficult to concentrate upon problems and eventualities though that was what she had gone there to do.

Endearing and Enduring Charm Of Quality-Kind Silk Prints

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

FABRICS may come and fabrics may go but ever-lovely, ever-flattering silk prints will live on in the affection of the fashion world forever. When an unexpected last minute invitation bids you hurry and join in a bridge party at your neighbor's; or a voice over the phone says "Meet me in an hour at the club for dinner," or your sorority club calls for an impromptu get-together luncheon in honor of an unexpected out-of-town guest, we'll wager that it's the gay little silk print frock that answers the momentous what to wear question for most women.

In regard to the three silk prints in the illustration, they are decidedly pace-setting fashions. Recently a second semi-annual fashion seminar was successfully staged by Amena Elliott Webster in Chicago. The vast audience at this all-day session which drew teachers and students in home economics from schools and colleges, and members of women's clubs and various organizations from near and far, was thrilled with a very style-revealing and highly educational number on the program which featured "Textiles Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow." Included in the fashions that went on parade in this noteworthy fabric demonstration were the originals of the modes here pictured which, be assured, gives these prints of pure silk unquestioned style prestige.

The high spot about the dress and coat ensemble to the right is the fact that a bowknot silk crepe fashions it, and bowknots, you must know, are tremendously important throughout the design this season. If you are in quest of a new silk print ask to see bowknot patterns. They're the latest! The dress features a gathered yoke of twin print sheer, and the simple coat is a heavier weave. The cool-looking frost-white jewelry and the wide brim white hat confirm the forthright importance of white accents and accessories.

When you buy silk print this season you do not stop at a mere dress-length of material but you will want to have the fun of fashioning an entire ensemble of gay print, which may include not only a matching hat, but gloves and parasol made of the same print. The biggest news of all is shoulder shawls made of squares of silk print finished off about the edges with hand knotted fringe. The costume ensemble of red and white printed silk crepon, to the left, adds a pillbox chapeau that is draped with matching crepon. Note the finely shirred white silk inserts that exquisitely detail the bodice top of the dress. Speaking of the color scheme of this striking costume, too much emphasis cannot be given the importance of red and white. Red and white prints are having a stupendous vogue, and as to red hats and gloves, bags, belts and red "hankies" watch the reports coming in from all style centers!

Navy silk crepe, in spaced white tulip design describes the material used for the dress centered in the picture. This brings out a very important style trend this season in silk prints, namely the two-color idea—one single color against a contrast color background, such as yellow or light green on gray, brown on white, or reverse the order, white on brown. Which reminds that brown prints are ever so smart—almost outliving navies or grays. Sunburst pleating over the bust and vertical stitched tucks below the waist are important styling details observed in the tulip print pictured. Here's something interesting in regard to the white straw cartwheel she wears—the brim is removable leaving a fitted little toque-like shape of coarse straw mesh with a flange across the back which may be worn on into the evening for informal dinner and dancing.

Hats of Fabric

Milliners are doing interesting things with fabrics these days. Enthusiasm for polka dots is widespread and their popularity is reflected in a big way in hat design. The use of polka dots is manifested in such clever ideas as large straw brims faced with dotted prints or in drapes and scarf streamers of bold dot fabrics, especially silk prints. Particularly attractive are scarf and hat ensembles as here pictured. Plaids, likewise stripes, for hat and bag sets also are making big appeal. The plaid silk hat and bag twosome shown interprets this trend.

Family Heirlooms With Bridal Array

You can believe everything you read in the society columns about the sparkling beauty of the bride. It's all true and it's all real because brides are wearing jewels again. They are even arranging their veils to fall from the family tiara or combining mother's heirloom lace with the bridegroom's gift of a modern clip or brooch. Notice how often you read in the social notes "the bride wore just one lovely ornament—a pin that belonged to her mother."

Some girls even prefer a diamond instead of a wedding check—not so lightly cashed and spent! Also the symbolism of this gem (it's ancient meaning was purity, fidelity and devotion) makes a lucky talisman for the bride.

Of course all the revival fashions in wedding gowns, with their tight little waists, square necks or round collars, and puffs of tulle and satin form the perfect background for traditional jewelry.

Variety in Fabrics Tempts Milliners

Milliners are no respecters of fabrics this season. They use anything and everything from silks and jerseys and nets and meshes and veils to calicoes and gingham, bright flowered chintz and the new hats with enormous brims of spick and span white starched lace are simply "dreams come true."

The smart trick this season is to have a hat made of the same material as your dress. For an exciting eye-catcher wear with your black or navy sheer this summer a hat of picturesque broad brim fashioned of very flowery chintz and see to it that your bag of ample proportions is made of the identical chintz.

Picked Up in Studios of Style Designers

There's a tropical note to some of the summer accessories. Smart and practical midday dresses of blue denim are destined to be popular.

Summer will find you wearing sheer coats over your cotton and silk evening gowns.

Heavy cotton mesh, like a fisherman's net, is the trim Piguet uses for a casual sports dress of sheer beige flannel.

That Nagging Backache

May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action
Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess blood and other impurities from the life-giving blood.

You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful excess body waste. They have had more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

HOMER BERRY, veteran test pilot, says:

SPEED-FLYING IS MY BUSINESS, BUT I SMOKE THE SLOWER-BURNING CIGARETTE, CAMELS. FOR EXTRA MILDNESS, EXTRA COOLNESS, AND EXTRA SMOKING!

In recent laboratory tests, CAMELS burned 25% slower than the average of the 15 other of the largest-selling brands tested—slower than any of them. That means, on the average, a smoking plus equal to 5 EXTRA SMOKES PER PACK!

FROM 50 to 500 miles per hour—Homer Berry has flown them all. This veteran test pilot started flying back in 1913... started smoking Camels the same year. "No other cigarette ever gave me anything like the pleasure of a Camel," he says. "What's more—in 26 years, Camel's slower burning has always given me a lot of extra smoking." Try the slower-burning cigarette made from costlier tobaccos... Camel. Get more pleasure per puff and more puffs per pack (see left).
