Fry in so many different ways, and yet until golden brown (4 to 5 minutes). is relatively inexpensive?

Do you want apples for cooking, or for baking? Or do you want them for eating apples or dessert? Apples should be selected according to the purpose for which you are to use

A good cooking apple should be tart, or at least medium acid, with a juicy, fine-grained flesh. A good cooking apple, however, should have a distinct apple flavor. You are, no doubt, familiar with such names as Rome Beauty, Winesap, Black Twig, Grimes Golden and McIntosh.

Have you ever had the sad experience of baking apples only to find that they have remained hard and lack juiciness? Or did you use a variety that became so watery upon baking that you couldn't quite tell what it was? The Wealthy, McIntosh, Grimes Golden, Jonathan, Rhode Island Greening or Northwestern Greening, the Rome Beauty, the Winesap and Black Twig are all varieties of apples which may be used for this purpose.

A good dessert apple should have a prominent and distinct apple flavor, mildly acid, and with a fine-flesh texture. Here again you may select the McIntosh, the Grimes Golden, the Jonathan, the Rome Beauty, the Black Twig, or the Delicious.

A bowl of shining apples will appeal to the children when they come home from school. There will be no for them to say, "Mom, hungry; what can I have to eat?' The Wealthy, the Delicious, and the Rome Beauty are all popular eating apples.

There is nothing more delicious than a baked apple, apple pie, or a raw apple salad, but have you ever tried apples in fritter batter, or combined them with green peppers for a salad? Norwegian Apple Pudding.

ONE day there came a letter with a rough sketch of the old rocker at the upper right. The last line of the letter said, "I will remove the rockers if you say so, Mrs. Spears, but I would like to keep them." Well, why not? There is nothing smarter now than things Victorian. Old oil lamps with flowered globes are being wired for electricity so, why not redesign this rocker along simple much as offering a taste to any of lines? NEW YORK. — Virginio Gayda, Italy's official writing wrist, pens a solemn warning to the U. S. A. In an editorial in his pa-Italy's Editorial per, Giornale D'Italia, he Spokesman Suave, tells us not to But Pen Ominous misunder-stand the Axis-Japan agreement and hints that we're in for bad trouble if we make a misstep.

Why Gayda should have been chosen to do the tough talking, or rather writing, for Italy all these years has been a puzzle to this onlooker. Not that he doesn't do it well, but it is so unlike him. I met him once at a tea party in Rome, in the studio of a British sculptor. One would have thought he wouldn't hurt a fly. That was soon after Mussolini took power. Tall, slender, fair-haired, with a small, silken mustache, impeccably dressed, Gayda seemed diffident and eager to please. He was then editor of Il Messaggero, which had been a strongly liberal paper, and he had made his political start in the general doctrinal zone of Mussolini's military munitions Marxian teachings.

But with the March on Rome he had done an about-face with Mussolini and was making his paper daily louder and fiercer. There was considerable embarrassment and shyness among the guests, as it wasn't safe for foreigners to mention Mussolini's name, and they engaged the suave Gayda in talk about art, Roman ruins, the glories of the Pitti and Uffizi, and the like.

Noting the signor's facile speech, I remarked to an old Scottish banker, standing by, that the editor enough. seemed like a mighty smart chap. "Too smart for his britches," growled the old Scot. One never would have thought that some day he would be telling the U.S. A. where it got off.

A native of Rome, he began his newspaper career as central European correspondent for the Stampa, of Turin. He was in Russia when the World war started, entered the diplomatic service there and returned to newspaper work as editor of Il Messaggero in 1921. It was in 1926 that Count Ciano, Mussolini's son-in-law, discovered his penchant for ominous and threatening prose and made him the nation's editorial spokesman, as editor of Giornale

WHILE a talent for makeshift might not rate highly in a civilization assailed by deadly precision, it has certain advantages in a democracy Col. Netherwood as against the Good Improviser, all-or-nothing

Yet No Apologist techniques of absolutist government. The mechanics of the latter are such that when it is wrecked, it is an inert, busted machine in a ditch, while a democracy has an organic quality which makes it adaptive, allows improvisation, and perhaps enables it to grow new tissue and survive a deal of waste and muddling. Col. Douglas L. Netherwood, commanding officer of the northeast anti-aircraft defense at Mitchel field, indirectly touches off this idea. Recruits for the anti-aircraft forces are wearing odd assortments of uniforms, sleeping in garages because of the lack of tents, and drilling without sufficient rifles or other equipment. To the worriers, Colonel Netherwood says:

"Shucks, we're doing all right, and I'm sure that the quartermasters will catch up on their outfitting soon. I drilled in my civilian clothes when I joined the army back in 1908, as a private after I graduated from college. I'm sure the young fellows we have out here at Mitchel field don't mind it any more than I did."

Colonel Netherwood was born in Birmingham, England, and, incidentally, the English are good improvisers and instinctive pregmatists. Their democracy came from adjustment and improvisation, rather than from the grand principles of the encyclopedists. However, Colonel Netherwood is no apologist for hit-or-miss preparedness.

In 1908 he entered the army, after his graduation from Texas Agricultural and Mechanical college. He has studied techniques of precision at the Army War college, the Army Industrial college and the Air Corps Practical school—with diplomas from all of them. He entered the signal corps and got his rating as a military aviator in 1917. In 1920 the aviation section of the signal corps was designated as the army air corps. He became a lieutenant colonel in 1935.

Made-to-Order Miracles

The advent of television created quite a nifty set of headaches for that corps of geniuses known in the radio world as "special effects" men. In radio work, it was a simple matter to simulate the explosion of a pistol by dropping a book flat upon a table. But in television the "unseen audience" wants to SEE that pistol—SEE those galloping horses. These photos show how the "special effects" department tackles the job. Right: A group of spiders at work. The mechanical insects, controlled by the wires of the web, merrily spin their yarn on tiny spinning wheels.

Refinishing Furniture. QUESTION: How can table-tops of Solid or veneer mahogany be treated for an oil finish, and for a glossy finish? What should be done to get a mahogany finish on tabletops that are not mahogany? Legs and other parts of the table are dark red, and the tops should match. Answer: In any case, the finish should be removed to the bare wood, which can be done with liquid varnish remover. Do not allow the remover to drip on the legs and other parts. The remover is applied liberally, and allowed to stand for 20 minutes or so; the finish can then be taken off with a rough cloth and a scraper. The remover is inflammable, so take precautions against fire. This will take off the stain as well as the finish. Follow by washing with turpentine, and then, after drying, apply mahogany oil stain. Allow to soak in for a minute or two and then wipe off. Continue to apply stain in this way until you have reached the shade that you want. Allow to dry thoroughly.

For an oil finish apply a mixture of three parts linseed oil and one part turpentine. After an hour for soaking in, wipe dry. Repeat in 24 hours and then, after two or three days for drying, begin to polish with a piece of carpeting or other rough

For a glossy finish, apply one coat of quick-drying varnish to the bare wood. When dry, rub smooth with very fine sandpaper. Then put on a second coat and polish by light rubbing with finely powdered rottenstone and sewing machine oil, or other light oil-not linseed oil.

Outdoor Ping-Pong Table. Question: What is the best way to construct an outdoor ping-pong table? In the past, the wooden tables have warped despite the fact that they were apparently well painted. Can you suggest a different material instead of wood, or a method of painting that will eliminate warp-

Answer: Some of the well-known manufacturers of plywood now make a plywood suitable for outside use. The laminations of wood are cemented together with synthetic resin glue, which is not affected by the weather. The entire plywood top is then given a prime coat of aluminum paint, followed by two coats of a good quality deck or outside house paint. Some public playgrounds now have ping-pong tables of concrete.

Blistered Paint. Question: I built an extension on my house last summer, and finished it with a high quality paint. In several places bubbles appeared; when touched, a red deposit like rust comes out. I am told that this is caused by the paint. What do you advise?

Answer: That effect cannot be blamed on the paint; it is from there is a leak that permits water to run down inside the clapboards; collecting on cross-pieces, it soaks into the clapboards from the back. On being drawn out to the front by warm air, it takes the paint with it Look for leaks in the joint between walls and window frames. Have a carpenter close them with caulking compound, forced in with a caulk ing-gun.

Dog Scratches on Doors. A correspondent sends the following for filling deep scratchings by dogs in grain finished doors: Make a putty out of fine sawdust, a little plaster of paris and spar varnish. Apply with a putty knife. When dry, sandpaper down, with the paper wrapped around a block of wood. Apply stain, and grain to match the door. When this is dry, revarnish the door. If it is done by a good worker, the repair can hardly be detected. (Note: for a complete job, put a pair of boxing gloves on the dog.)

Brittle Reed Chairs. Question: My fine reed sun room chairs and furniture seem very brittle and small pieces frequently break out. Can I do anything to make it less brittle? How can I refinish the surface?

Answer: After removing the finish, coat the reed with a half-andhalf mixture of raw linseed oil and turpentine. After an hour or so, wipe the surface clean. Allow to dry for 24 hours, then finish with one or two coats of a top quality spar varnish.

Fireproofing Cloth. Question: How can I fireproof cloth and paper? Answer: Dissolve 21/2 pounds boric acid and three pounds crystallized borax in six gallons of water; or if this is too much, use the same proportions with smaller quantities. Soak the cloth well, and hang up to drip and dry. Fireproofing of paper depends on the character of the paper. It is more difficult than the fire-proofing of cloth, because of the wrinkling and uneven shrinkage of the paper in drying.

Waterproofing Canvas. Question: Kindly give me the formula for waterproofing canvas. Answer: Make a solution of one pound of shaved paraffin in a gallon of gasoline. The canvas should be stretched when applying the solution. Do this work out in the open on an overcast day and do not smoke.

Refinishing a Dresser. Question: The top of a dresser is badly checked or peeling. When I remove it, will I have to put on more Answer: If you use a varnish remover of any kind, the stain will come off with the varnish. For a flat dresser top, it would be better to take off the varnish by scraping or sandpapering. At a hardware store you can get a scraper with a wood handle and with removable blades, which is easy to use. As this will not take out the stain, clear varnish will be a sufficient finish.

U. S.-Japan Relationship Is Strained; Americans in Far East Ordered Home; Naval Reserves Called Into Service As Army Makes Way for Conscripts

(EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst and not necessarily of this newspaper.) (Released by Western Newspaper Union.)_

CRISIS:

War Ahead?

Since Japan joined the Fascist Axis, attacks on America and Americans by the goverrnment-controlled only by the belligerent mouthings of the Mussolini-controlled newspapers of Italy.

When Japan signed the treaty of at once. Berlin, Washington was inclined at first to make little of it, even though it was openly stated to be aimed at the United States because of aid given to Britain. But Japan did not take it as lightly. Prince Fumimaro Konoye, Japanese premier, said openly that if the United States persists in "challenging" the Axis powers, a war will follow. Later there was an official statement that if England opened the Burma road, lone gateway to China for munitions, Japan would declare war.

Many in Washington now believe that a clash with Japan is bound to come sooner or later and that it might as well be sooner, because if Britain should fall, the United States would be faced with aggressors on both oceans at the same time. Culmination was a state department order to all Americans in the Near East to return home. Britain will open the Burma road October

And in Shanghai, Japanese officials had another problem to worry them. For despite a heavy military guard placed around Fu Siao-en, their puppet ruler of that Chinese city, he was slashed to death by some unknown assailant.

Enraged Japanese authorities declared that the assassination was an "inside job." Shanghai police reported that they had been asked by the Japanese to aid in a search for the slain man's personal servant, one Zung Tsu-en, who was absent from his master's house after the

Price of Peace

Several unofficial offers have been made to the United States. All aim at involving this nation with Japan or so crippling U. S. armed forces so as to make the nation ineffective. The head of the Japanese press association suggested the United States show its good will by abandoning the naval base at Pearl Har-bor, Hawaii; withdraw from Guam and Midway islands.

held out another scheme. In polite terms it suggested that if America would stop giving help to England, the Axis powers would reward America by giving her Canada.

Most reception centers are being designed to "process" only 1,000 to 1,500 men. The drafted men may be held in their home communities anywhere from a week to ten days. Each day a quota will be sent to the reception centers. There they will be equipped, their army records initiated and after a short stay most will be sent to regular army camps to fill out those units to full strength. Some new units will be created, of course.

Not all the new soldiers will be equipped with the army's modern woolen "elastique" trouser and biswing coats with sports-back. Many will be handed the old-style army woolen breeches with spiral leggings and the obsolete standing-collar

Out of storage also came 105 U.S. army tanks. These were loaded on flatcars en route to Canada for training of Canadian troops. It was only

TRAVELERS: At Brenner Pass

At Brennero, pass in the Alps between Germany and Italy, Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini held another of their strange conferences. The meeting was in a railroad car, with blinds pulled down, guarded with foot soldiers, artillery and antiaircraft guns.

There was no announcement. Shortly afterward, however, Germany moved several divisions of troops into Rumania and seized the British owned oil fields there; Japan made more aggressive statements to the United States; and there were rumors that the Nazi legions, waiting in French channel ports, would start the invasion of England.

Air Struggle

The duel in the skies continued with greater vigor. Nazi airmen smashed the center of London with explosive and incendiary bombs. The house of lords was damaged, great department stores were destroyed and millions of people spent many nights in subways and airraid shelters.

Neville Chamberlain, figure of British inner war cabinet. He was succeeded by magnetic Ernest Bevin, Laborite and Socialist. There was no peace. POLITICS:

In the last month before election day, all candidates in the Presidential sweepstakes were out on the stump and dated to stay out until a few days before November 5.

Wendell L. Willkie, the Republican candidate, after a swing through the East and a week devoted to New England, headed back toward the Midwest, covering New York state, Ohio, Illinois and Missouri.

Defense and labor were the theme of his addresses in the East. He charged the New Deal had bungled America's defense during the seven years of Hitler's rise in Europe and cited speeches of the President to show that he was acquainted with the danger but did not press for a stronger army and navy.

President Roosevelt swung through western Pennsylvania and Ohio, inspecting steel plants and making the dedication address at Pittsburgh's Terrace Village, where the U.S. Housing authority's 100,000th unit was opened.

Before leaving the White House, the President cited a Rome dispatch in that day's newspaper as proving the contention that the Axis powers were seeking his defeat. The dispatch read:

"The Axis is out to defeat President Roosevelt not as a measure of interference in the internal policies of the United States but because of the President's foreign policy, and because of everything he stands for in the eyes of the Italians and Ger-mans. The normal strategy of the Axis is to do something before November 5 that would have a great effect on the election campaign."

The vice presidential candidates also were on the stump. One day in Minnesota Henry A. Wallace's car was attached to the same train on which Charles A. McNary rode.

FREEDOM:

At Columbia U.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, 78year-old president of Columbia university, whose politics seldom have been free from criticism, stirred up another hornet's nest when he spoke to the school's faculty on "The World Crisis." Discussing academic freedom-freedom of speech for teachers-he said that in this emergency the right should be confined to accomplished scholars." He definitely ruled out students. He told the faculty members that "behind the war of conflicting doctrines, there is no doubt where Columbia stands." He invited all who did not agree to withdraw.

Some Columbia professors praised the stands, some were noncommittal and others considered a formal protest. The student newspaper voiced objection. In congress Sen. Rush Holt (D., W. Va.) and Sen. Bennett Clark (D., Mo.) denounced the statement.

MISCELLANY:

Not all the funniest things happen in Washington. But in one week: The Federal Works administration distributed an official's speech with memorandum attached saying, 'This speech was not delivered' the navy submitted plans for a temporary building designed to be so ugly it would be replaced soon; congress amended a law which gave the king of England jurisdiction in the District of Columbia; the government reported officially that the Germans were not undermining the thumb tack industry, and a motherin-law wrote the draft board asking that her son be sent "far, far away."

¶ Steve Vasilakos, who has sold peanuts at a stand in front of the White House during the terms of peace and appeasement, left the five Presidents, received citizenship papers after failing on three previous occasions to pass educational tests. The following day he posted a sign announcing he would give to the Red Cross the receipts of two days' sales. "We Americans must

Attempts to Solve Farm Problems Are Older Than the Nation Itself; They

> By ELMO SCOTT WATSON (Released by Western Newspaper Union.) UCH matters as controlling the ravages of injurious insects and crop parasites, prevention of soil erosion, control of animal plant diseases, improvement of agricultural implements, extension of crop rotation and promotion of soil management may seem to be strictly modern farm problems. But, as a matter of fact, they are as old as the United States itself. More than 155 years ago-even before Washington's first inaugural—an agricultural society was formed in Philadelphia to study and suggest the solution of these and other pressing farm problems. And, believe it or not, that organization is still in existence! It is the Philadelphia Society for Promoting Agriculture, oldest farm organization in America. Its members today continue to add to the sum of agricultural knowledge as did its pioneer founders a century and a half ago. The story of the origin and development of this society is one of the most romantic chapters of agricultural

With the Revolutionary war successfully concluded and the independence of this country recognized by the nations of Europe, leaders throughout the states exchanged their implements of war for the plow. They endeavored to promote a fondness for the pursuits of peace which alone, they knew, would strengthen the young nation.

The man who galvanized these ideas into action for the progress of American agriculture was Judge John Beale Bordley. To Philadelphia came Bordley after the war from Maryland, where he had played a distinguished part in the life of the colonies. Philadelphia was then the capital of the new republic and as such had the significance of Washington today. Representative leaders from all the states were there helping form the new government. The city was a center from which ideas might be spread throughout the land. Bordley had been judge of the admiralty court in Baltimore, but gave up this post when the Revolutionary war broke out to devote himself to his farms. He interested himself in a variety of agricultural pursuits-stock raising, fruit growing, tobacco culture and farm house construction. When the supplies of the Continental army grew scarce, he killed his cattle and sent the beef to Washington. He contributed in other ways to the success of the Colonies. He carried on experiments in agricultural practices and became an apostle of agricultural progress He had the results of his experiments printed as broadsides and fastened

He associated himself with influential people in Philadelphia, among whom he found many who shared his views on the necessity of increasing the knowledge of agriculture. After discussing the project with many of these men, he called a meeting on February 11, 1785. Twenty-three attended and became charter members of the Philadelphia Society for Promoting Agriculture. Among these were four signers of the Declaration of Independence - Robert Morris, James Wilson, Dr. Benjamin Rush and George Clymer. There were seven who had borne arms in the Revolution, including officers such as Gen. John Cadwalader, Col. George Morgan and Col. John Nixon. Soon after the society's organization, two weekly newspapers-

Sponsored Essay Contests. Because of Judge Bordley's advanced age he declined any office in the society when the permanent organization was made. Hence the group elected Samuel Powell as president, Tench Francis as treasurer and Timothy Pickering of Salem, Mass., secretary of state in the national government, as secretary. Carpenter's hall became the regular

The society's first major undertaking was the sponsoring of essay contests on agricultural subjects for which substantial prizes were awarded. First prize, in some instances, was a piece of plate valued at $200. Other prizes included gold and silver medals.

In the light of present-day agriculture, the subjects of these essays seem surprisingly current. Apparently they were pressing enough even then to merit special attention. One of them was "The best method of recovering worn - out fields to a hearty (healthy and productive) state within the power of the common farmer." Prophetic as was the vision of the pioneer agricultural leaders comprising the Philadelphia society, they could not foretell the damage which erosion and poor soil management were to inflict on future American farming.

Were these pioneer farm leaders alive today, they would more than ever preach the necessity for an ever-increasing program of soil conservation and fertilization that would put back into the land the vitally needed nitrogen, phosphorus and potash so wastefully drained away. They could take comfort in the fact, however, that the means of restoring fertility today are amazingly improved over what they were a century and a half ago. Practical results on millions of American farms have demonstrated that the intelligent use of fertilizer will increase crops and replenish the soil's depleted supply of plant food.

The campaign to promote soil conservation which the Philadelphia society sponsored so long ago has enlisted effective support from the United States department of agriculture, from soil scientists, teachers, experimental stations, county agents and fertilizer manufacturers who are constantly interpreting to farmers the latest discoveries concerning

As with soil improvement, the society encouraged and spurred the development of many other important projects. Among these were the improvement of transportation and communication so vital to the development of agricultural markets, through the building of roads and canals; en-couragement of education in veterinary medicine; the holding of cattle shows and expositions; the development of experimental farms; and the introduction of lime and clover.

In 1786 John Bordley submitted plans and descriptions for a seed drill to plant wheat in clusters and clumps. About the same sideration to the development of a threshing machine to replace trampling by horses and the use of a hand flail Discuss Experiment Farms. In 1791 a project was proposed that would vitally influence the future progress of American agriculture. A Mr. DuPlaine offered his services in the "management and culture of a small farm for the sake of making experiments in husbandry." The society resolved that "Although they highly approve of the plan for an experimental farm, it would not be convenient at present to carry the same into execution." Today every state has its experimental farms and stations which provide the farmer with an ever-widening knowledge of the soil, of crops and their plant food

Of outstanding eminence among early leaders of the society was Judge Richard Peters, who became president in 1805. The minute books of the organization's meetings in that year show that a new type of mold board for a plow, developed by Thomas Jefferson, was shown to the members. At the same time, Hoxie's auger for boring post holes, a crude threshing machine invented by Deneale, and Henry Clymer's harrow for Indian corn were discussed.

In the following year President Peters undertook a long series of contributions to the work of the society on the improvement of cattle. Later he presented papers on subjects ranging from Barbary sheep, obtained for him in northern Africa by General Eaton, to crop rotation and the natural succession in forests.

In the summer of 1822 the society sponsored the first of a series of cattle shows and agricultural exhibits which, in a way, might be called the forerunner of the modern International Livestock exposition in Chicago. Thus through the years has this unique organization functioned to help popularize new ideas for the betterment of American agriculture. There have, of course, been periods of inactivity and years for which no records are available, but by and large the group has succeeded in keeping alive the purposes of its founding faCrocheted Doilies to Dress Up the Home

Why Let Yourself Get Constipated?

Why endure those dull headachy days due to constipation, plus the inevitable trips to the medicine chest, if you can avoid both by getting at the cause of the trouble?

If your constipation, like that of millions, is due to lack of "bulk" in the diet, the "better way" is to eat Kellogg's All-Bran. This crunchy toasted breakfast cereal is the ounce of prevention that's worth a pound of emergency relief. It helps you not only to get regular but to keep regular, day after day and month after month, by the pleasantest means you ever knew.

CHAPTER I

The site of the rancho could not have been more happily chosen. For miles the landscape lay like a park in gently rolling hills and widespreading valleys. The soil was carpeted with nutritious grasses for Don Alfredo's herds, and nature provided for spring and summer an un-failing profusion of wild flowers that turned the broad fields into a riot of purple and gold, imperial in beauty. Overlooking this inviting prospect rose the wooded foothills, like the frame of a picture, dignified in the distance by the heights of the ma-

The ranch house had been built on an elevation that commanded a view of both the ocean and the hill coun-jestic Sierras.

Don Alfredo had developed the rancho and built the ranch house to welcome his Spanish bride, now Dona Juana, the mother of his children, two little girls of six and eight years and one older brother. Dona Juana had brought from Spain the culture and traditions of Spanish centuries, and at the presidio in San Diego, in the gatherings at the rancho, or when a more formal festivity called for a baille in town Dona Juana was notable among beautiful women for gaiety and

In her necessarily crude California surroundings, far from the stately repose of Estramadura and Madrid, Dona Juana confessed to only one feeling of uneasiness: that was what her devoted Don Alfredo termed an "unreasonable" fear of mountain Indians, who at long intervals made forays on the ranchos to steal horses.

It was only gradually that she overcame this fear. But the sunshine and the peace of her immediate surroundings, the care she devoted to her children and the al-ways affectionate solicitude of her husband, were powerful sedatives for her peace of mind.

It was thus that the years of motherhood passed for Dona Juana. Her own maid was an alert mission Indian named Monica. Monica, like her mistress, was of an apprehensive temperament; she had even less confidence in the Sierra Indians than Dona Juana herself.

The older of the two girls had grown to be eight when her mother ter, opened it to the murderers and pointed with eager, cunning eyes to made ready for a little house party, a valecito casero. On the day before the invitations were sent out by messenger, Monica came to her mistress with disquieting news. Dona Juana was seated in the patio facing the garden. The two children were gathering flowers.

The elder ran to her mother with a pretty bloom and a question. "What is this one, Madre mia?"

"That, Carmelita, is a Mariposa, a beautiful flower. I am glad you found one."

Before Teresa, the younger girl, could bring a rival for her sister's posy Monica came running down from the house. She ignored her pets, the little girls, and spoke in low tones to her mistress.

Dona Juana started. "Where did you hear this?" she asked.

"From Manuelo, the cook. You know, senora, he has a boy, Yosco. I do not trust that boy. Manuelo is honest—he has warned us before. I think Yosco gets his news secretly from a renegade mission Indian and tells his father.'

"When does Manuelo say the attack will take place?'

"He does not know-but soon." Dona Juana left Monica with the children and returned to the house. She found Don Alfredo in his office, cleaning his carbine for a hunt. "Alfredo," said his wife, "Monica tells me an Indian outbreak is coming. You know, they always attack the outlying ranchos first. Monica thinks we should go in at once to the presidio, Alfredo, and stay till the danger is over."

Don Alfredo showed impatience. "Monica is always bringing some cock-and-bull story about an attack. She had the same story a year ago, and there was no attack.

"True, Alfredo. But we learned afterward they were frightened away by the bonfires Don Santiago built and by the noise he made."

Her husband scoffed. "And are these the savages we are to run away from, who are scared by bonfires and by the noise Don Santiago makes at Tia Juana when he is half drunk? It is nonsense, Juana; pay no attention to these old wives' tales." But Don Alfredo's assurance did not set his wife's forebodings at rest. She abandoned her plans for the house party. On the evening of the following Saturday-Monica's first alarm had come on Monday—the Indian woman came to her mistress and Don Alfredo, begging them to heed her. With tears in her eyes she told them the Indians would surely attack. She urged that they leave at once for the presidio and safety. Dona Juana was so seriously affected by the threat of danger to her children that her husband reluctantly consented to go to the presidio until the threatened danger had passed. Sunday morning, after a hurried breakfast and with all preparations for departure made. Don Alfredo. with two vaqueros, went down to the corral. They were lassoing horses for the trip when they heard a yell that split the air. It was the riding at breakneck pace out of the Naked or half-naked, they dashed helter-skelter down on the ranch house, yelling and beating their ponies. Don Alfredo and the two vaqueros were caught at the corral gate. Realizing their deadly peril, they ran on foot toward the ranch house for muskets. They hoped that the marauders might stop first at the corral to run off horses. But the Indians were after more than

Despite the speed of their pursuers the frantic Spaniard and his fleet cowboys, each of them already hit but not disabled, by murderous arrows, managed, breathless, to make the front door of the house. Don Alfredo sprang at the thumb latch to throw open the door.

He gave a loud cry. The door was barred from the inside. He raised his voice in a mighty shout, his companions joining in. With only seconds left before the yelling horsemen should be upon them the three desperate men threw themselves with all their force against the barred door-in vain. It had been the boast of the Rancho Los Alamos that no foe, however powerful, could break through that door.

Only a moment of life was left to the distracted Don to wonder, amazed, at why his own door had been thus barred against him. The next moment he and his men lay on the porch, shot through and through with arrows. The foremost of their pursuers, springing from ponies, were already astride their victims, hacking their bodies with knives as they glutted their fury and grunted at each stab into the bodies of their dying victims.

In less time than the telling, it was over. The brown tile of the portico was a shambles. The savfrenzied with dragged the bodies from the door, and the chief, his hands dripping with the blood of Don Alfredo, pounded on the door and shouted in his Indian tongue.

The door was promptly flung open. The savages, rushing into the house, ran to the bedrooms. There were four. The Indian houseboy, Yosco, who had barred the door to his masthe room of Don Alfredo.

Within the room there were more whites to be butchered. Don Alfredo's wife, clasping in each arm a young daughter, was on her knees before a pitying statue of the Blessed Virgin, calling distractedly for a dress. Escaping the roaming eyes protection. The chief dashed toward of the marauding savages, her. His hatchet was uplifted to cleave her skull when, shrieking aloud, Monica, the Indian maid, dashed through the crowding warriors and seized the chief's arm.

He turned and struck her to the floor with his fist. Before he could turn again and bring his hatchet on the Dona's head Monica had sprung to her feet and grasping his enraged arm, pleaded for her mistress' life. He struck her off and turned again, with hatchet uplifted. But the two screaming little girls clasped their arms about their mother's head.

The infuriated butcher tried to tear them away. They screamed the more and clung the closer to their mother. Monica once more threw herself upon the savage. The lust for killing momentarily passed. The beauty in the uplifted, terrorstricken faces of the girls gave him another thought. He thrust the panting Monica away, ordered the mother of the girls bound and, with the savages who had crowded after him, ran from room to room, searching for more victims.

Every corner of the premises was searched till the hidden guns and powder of the rancho were found. and these, with many grunts and yells, were taken out of doors for the Wines and brandies were discovered. With bottles and demijohns to their mouths the attackers poured fiery potions down their throats, grabbing the bottles from one another until they were staggering around in every stage of girls torn from their mother's arms and carried to his ponies. Again he sought to kill Dona Juana, and wrenched from her mistress, prevented the murder, offering her own life to appease the drunken rage of the captor.

As the liquor worked on the savage his senses reeled increasingly, and as if glutted with bloodshed, he ordered the Dona stripped of her clothing and driven from the house. In the interval the buildings had all been gutted, and, capering before the house, the drunken savage arrayed in Don Alfredo's hat ordered the ranch buildings burned.

Fires were set. Flames were soon rising in every direction. Drunken Indians danced about the flames and shot arrows into the burning houses; others, mounting, made ready to run off the horses from the corral. The chief, securing the two fainting girls on a spare pony headed for the mountains, hardly looked back at the complete ruin of what,

three hours before, had been the famed Rancho Los Alamos. Monica, her shriveled features streaming with grief, had crept down to the river after her mistress had been stripped of her clothing. Hidden under her arm, she carried worked her way stealthily down along the river, keeping under the shelving bank until the ranch house and Indians were out of sight.

Leaving the river bed, she hurried through a field of barley that partly hid her from sight until she reached the trail to town and, turning into this, ran at top speed. It was along this trail that she knew she must look for her mistress.

Monica had not far to seek for the unhappy Dona. She lay partly on her face in the hollow within which she had striven to hide her terrible plight. The devoted maid cried out as she ran to her, dropping to her knees and hugging the trembling body in her arms while she wet it with tears. She spoke to the hardly conscious woman. The Dona's wealth of golden hair swept over her shoulders down to her waist, as if in protest against the outrageous treatment inflicted on her and to protect so far as it might her outraged sensibilities. Her half-closed eyes, as Monica turned her face upward and begged pathetically for a word of recognition, gave no answer to the weeping maid. The lips of her mistress did indeed move but only in incoherent mutterings. With the superhuman strength of the Indian. Monica succeeded in getting the protection of the dress she carried on her mistress' quivering form and laid her tenderly back, staring with meaningless eyes into the cloudless sky.

Monica herself, wild with despair, began again to pray, her arms lifted The chief grew even more vicious toward heaven as was her mistress' war whoop of the Sierra Indians, in his cups. He ordered the frantic | wont. Only a few minutes had passed when she saw a youth riding up toward the rancho. She sprang to her feet. She knew the figure, again Monica, who could not be screamed, and, as the lad turned toward her, waved her arms fran-

> It was young Alfredo, the pet of the Rancho Los Alamos, tall and fine for his twelve years, son and heir of his father.

"Alfredo," she cried, "come quick! I am Monica! Quick, quick!" He ran to her. As he stared, dismayed at the sight of his unconscious mother, Monica clasped him in her arms. Hardly had the word "Indiana!" passed her line when "Indians!" passed her lips when, flinging down his gun, he threw himself on the breast of his mother, raining kisses on her closed eyes and calling to her passionately to

Monica, kneeling beside him, told the boy in broken sentences of the fearful tragedy of the brief hour after he had left the rancho to hunt quail in the near-by foothills.

She cut short Alfredo's frantic grief. "Now," she exclaimed, "you must be a man, Alfredo! As fast as you can, run to the presidio for help. Send the soldiers! Quick! Quick!" "But my sisters? Tell me!"

"Gone, Alfredo! The Indians have stolen them. The soldiers! The soldiers! Make haste! Help me save your mother.'

CHAPTER II

The morning sun was high, but the padre in his brown woolen habit olodded steadily on, sustained by the thought that Rancho Los Alamos could now be only a little way ahead. There, he promised himself, he would find rest, a little refreshment and some pleasant conversation with Don Alfredo and his lovely wife, Dona Juana, before he continued his southward journey with the patient Indian neophyte now trudging by his side.

Hardly had the pleasurable thought crossed his mind when the neophyte halted and, cupping his left and above his eyes, looked toward he hills beyond the river.

Padre Vicente Pasqual paused. What do you see, Diego?"

"Smoke, Padre." "What smoke? I see none." Diego pointed. "Across the river. Toward Alamos. Smoke."

"Your eyes are younger than mine, Diego. I see no smoke." White spirals of smoke were rising lazily and swaying dreamily in the hot sunshine.

"It is smoke," repeated the Indian solemnly. "There is no matanza, nothing to cause smoke at Los Alamos. But we shall soon be there. Lower your pack a moment and rest your shoul-"I am not weary, Padre. Let us Curiosity was stronger than a sense of fatigue with the Indian. He quickened his pace. Smoke at Los Alamos-Diego said no more, but he thought much.

Just before the ranch buildings of Los Alamos were to come into view Diego stood still. "I am afraid, Padre," he said slowly, "we shall see the work of bad Indians at Los

"What do you mean, my son?" "Bad Indians." "Yes, but what?"

They followed the trail through a field of wheat. "Look." Diego pointed. The ruins of Rancho Los Alamos were in full view. Padre Pasqual stared in amazement and grief. His staff dropped from his grasp. His hands parted in horror. "Merciful God!" he cried in agonv. "What has been here?" He fell on his knees, and, with face uplifted and eyes sightless, prayer poured from his trembling lips. It was some moments before he could compose himself. He held out a hand for Diego's help—the padre's knees were old-and, regaining his feet beside the silent Indian, took from his hand the crude staff. "We nust hasten, Diego, hasten," he exclaimed unsteadily. "Why do you
