THE COVERED DISH CHURCH SUPPER (See Recipes Below)

As I sit here thinking about church | to the creamed mixture alternately suppers, my mind wanders back several years to the suppers I attended in my old home town. There was always a feeling of congeniality, of hospitality and fellowship. The annual church supper was something that couldn't be missed.

Can you pass a table containing a tempting assortment of foods without wanting at least a taste of everything? Can you decide whether or not you want the cocoanut cream pie which is heaped with fluffy whipped cream, or the rich-looking chocolate cake with the thick fudge icing, when you know that you are entitled to only one dessert? Of course not! Instead of having such a wide selection of food for a covered dish supper, why not plan a well-balanced menu?

In fact, it challenges doubters to a blind-fold test wherein an ensemble is actually selected at random, blind-folded. The secret lies in colors so blended as to be congenial in any combination. There are two different groups of such color lines on the market this fall, one of these consisting of a series of decorative fabrics in six different basic colors, all dyed in tones that are interchangeably harmonious with each other. The colors in this concordant group include green, burgundy, cocoa, roseberry, tea rose and blue, each offered in a variety of fabrics such as damask, an ombre satin stripe, a two color chevron, a matelasse quilted cloth, a jaspe texture, or a floral print.

The other line featuring correlated colors is even more ambitious, including not only fabrics but wall paper, carpets, lamps, accessories and featuring a range of seven col-

On the other hand, there will doubtless always be those more individual souls who will prefer to "mix their own." For them, there is a wide range of many smart colors, mostly rather definite pastels, by the way, or the correlated groups mentioned above present many ideas for separate color purchases to be used with numerous other things.

As for wall colors, aside from the tints included in the correlated groups, the decorators predict that greens, especially the yellow greens, are back in fashion importance again with one leading designer putting lime green first in his list for fall walls.

Daisy Hot Dish Mat An Appropriate Gift

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

T WAS the flower handle of the tea-pot lid that suggested this daisy mat. I had been thinking of making a hot dish out of firmly braided strips of cotton cloth. 1 wanted it to be thick and sewn firmly like a rag rug, so that it would stand frequent scrubbings. The design had to be novel and gay so that it would be appropriate for a Christmas gift or would attract attention if used to sell at a church bazaar. All the directions you need to make one are right here in the sketch.

Cotton flannel or heavy cotton knitted material are good to use for the braided strips. Cut the strips two inches wide if the goods is heavy or wider if light weight. Braid tightly and then use No. 8 white cotton thread to sew, as shown. A set of these mats are pretty on the table; and mats for oval dishes may be made by sewing two daisies together.

* * * NOTE: There are directions for a hot dish mat made of cable cord in SEWING, Book 4. Books 2 and 3 also contain directions for many gifts and novelties. Speak 'Pidgin' Eskimo

As the Eskimo language contains so many nouns and verbs that can be spoken and written in several hundred different ways, few traders or explorers have ever tried to learn it. Instead, they use a sort "pidgin" Eskimo, which contains words from many languages including the Danish, Spanish and Hawaiian.—Collier's.

Interest in the current draft program has led the government to place on display in the Washington office of the Selective Service board this first World war draft register. The register shows that the draft lottery began 9:16 a. m., Friday, July 20, 1917, and ended 16 hours and 46 minutes later, with the drawing of the 10,500th capsule. The same method is being used to determine the order in which men shall be called for the 1940 peacetime conscription program.

DEFENSE:

Numbers Called

To War Secretary Henry L. Stimson went the honor of selecting the first number in the national selective service lottery. President Roosevelt was to pick the first capsule out of the goldfish bowl that was used in the 1917 draft lottery, but graciously yielded to Stimson. The late Newton D. Baker, secretary of war under President Wilson, selected the first number in 1917.

The industrial program of national defense entered its second phase. First was drafting and awarding of contracts. Billions of dollars worth of goods, from battleships to paper clips, were contracted for.

The job now is one of procurement, actual manufacture on the speed-up scale demanded by the Defense Commission in order to achieve the two-ocean navy and equip an army that will number close to 1,500,000 within a few

WAR AT NIGHT:

Tactics Change

England was emerging from almost three months of continual bombing with greater confidence in its ability to withstand whatever the Luftwaffe can deliver. As the stormy weather wore on and German planes were not halted by fog and freezing weather, British air leaders increased the fury of their own raids over France, Germany and Italy. Prime Minister Winston Churchill made bold to predict that by spring, 1941, with the help of American production, England will seize supremacy of the air.

The German air attack on London was reduced in one respect. Daylight raids were fewer and less violent. In the beginning Air Marshal Goering sent large formations in daylight raids. During this period the British scored heavily. Then the tactics shifted to single planes at varying heights. The German losses were reduced, but still remained

Meanwhile members of the same committee declared they have proof that Friedhelm Draeger, German consul in New York, has for six years been the actual head of the National Socialist party in the United States. They said the German diplomat has been "under observation for a long time" and is head of a vast ring of espionage, sabotage and propaganda.

It was revealed that Draeger's connections were linked up when a raid was made on the German Tourist Information Bureau and Transocean Press, both in New York.

This Example of 'Art Serves Commerce' Linked Together the Names of Two Men, Both Famous in Annals of the Frontier

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON ECENTLY a New York art gallery held the first public exhibition of a collection of paintings of unusual historic interest. Not only were these canvases the work of George Catlin, the famous painter of Indians, but associated with them is another man's name, well known on the frontier. He was Col. Samuel Colt, inventor of the six-shooter which played such 'an important role in the winning of the West.

The linking of the names of these two frontier notables came about in this way: At the beginning of the Mexican war a detachment of American dragoons was ambushed by a Mexican patrol and the only man who escaped was a Captain Thornton who shot his way to freedom with a brace of Colt revolvers.

When Gen. Zachary Taylor heard of this, he was much impressed and asked for more information about these weapons. Capt. Sam Walker of the Texas Rangers, who was guarding Taylor's lines of communications and who had influenced Colt to develop a .44-caliber revolver in addition to the .34-caliber which he had been manufacturing, told the general that the only thing wrong with the revolvers was that there were not enough of them.

Thereupon Taylor sent Walker to Washington to make known to the President the need of his soldiers for more weapons of this sort. The result was an order on Colt for 1,000 of his guns, which he at once supplied. More than that, Colt, who was an early-day "super-salesman," put over as clever a publicity campaign as any modern press agent could have devised.

"It was not the sales of his revolvers to the army that made Sam Colt," writes Jack Rohan in his "Yankee Arms Maker: The Incredible Career of Samuel Colt" (Harper and Brothers), "It was the manner in which he capitalized the victories of the Americans over numerically superior forces. The revolvers in use at Resaca de la Palma, Monterey and Buena Vista were few and far between. But those few, when fense industries "like the story around the world, accounted for the defeat of the Mexicans. And the latter, glad of any excuse for their humiliation, cheerfully corroborated his claim!"

Soon after the close of the Mexican war came the discovery of gold in California. Emigrant trains began streaming across the Western plains, heading for the new diggings in California or for the rich lands of the Oregon country. The result of this epic migration was the inevitable clash with the Indians who had already learned to fear and hate the land-hungry white men.

Sam Colt, the Yankee arms-

ued at $250 it is safe to estimate that the original paintings are worth easily ten times that

No doubt George Catlin would be surprised if he could know what a high value is placed upon his work today. Born at Wyoming, Pa., in 1796 the son of a lawyer-father, his boyhood, according to his own statement, "was whiled away, apparently, somewhat in vain, with books reluctantly held in one hand, and a rifle or fishing pole firmly and affectionately grasped in the other."

His father was ambitious for him to become a lawyer, too, so he obediently studied for that pro-fession and began practicing in Philadelphia. But, being a lover of the outdoors, he found his pictures of village and hunting scenes, of Indian games and ceremonies, of the scenery of the plains and mountains. Although Catlin went among the Indians on this peaceful mission, it was still a dangerous business. So "just in case"—he went armed, and the guns which he carried were made by Sam Colt.

Catlin's "North American Indian Portfolio," published in London in 1844, was proof of his ability to make the kind of pictures of wild life in the West that would appeal to men likely to purchase Sam Colt's product. So he commissioned the artist to paint some pictures for him in which Colt guns would be prominently displayed in scenes illustrating their usefulness in hunting or Indianfighting. The result was a dozen such canvases, painted between 1854 and 1857, which Colt used for display and from which litho-graphs were made for advertising promotion.

After they had served that purpose, the paintings were hung on "Armsmear," in Hartford, Conn. Later they were relegated to an unused room on the third floor of another Colt home in Newport, R. I. It was only recently that they emerged from this obscurity and were placed on public exhibition in the New York gallery, there to be hailed as a rediscovered "find" of American "primitive" art.

For with the passing years the fame of George Catlin has grown. Before his death he presented to the Smithsonian institution more than 500 of his paintings. Some of these were destroyed or injured in a fire which swept the institution in 1865 but the remainder of the collection now housed there is valued at more than $1,000,000. There is no way of estimating what the paintings which he made for Colt are worth but some clue may be obtained from this

By demonstrating the superiority of his revolver and the repeating rifle, which he had recently invented, over the Indians' bows and arrows he could sell large numbers of his weapons to the westward-faring emigrants. Although advertising was still in its infancy, Sam Colt knew that "it pays to advertise" and he also knew that one of the best ways to put across an advertising message was through the medium of pictures. Two decades earlier an artist named George Catlin had ascended the Upper Missouri and lived among "48 of the wildest and most remote tribes," making paintings of everything that would illustrate the life and the country of those tribes-portraits of the chiefs,

In commenting on these prints Goodspeed said: "Until recently the set of six drawings which George Catlin made for the Colt Fire Arms Manufacturing company was known to us by title alone. We had never owned a set and we remember seeing only one listed by another dealer. These six lithographs are, by all evidence, very rare and this is the only set we have offered in 40 years of book and print selling." If the lithographs are val-

Although Catlin was married by this time, neither the opposition of his wife nor arguments of other relatives could dissuade him from his purpose. He set out for the Indian country and lived among the Indians for eight years during which time he sketched or painted 3,000 full-length figures, made 33 portraits in oil and gathered together a collection of In-dian costumes "and other manufactures from the size of a wigwam down to the size of a quill or a rattle

With these pictures and curiosities which he had acquired at such a cost of time, work and danger he traveled throughout the United States and exhibited them in all of the leading cities. Everywhere he went he attracted crowds. Then he crossed the Atlantic and exhibited in England, Belgium and France where King Louis Philippe was so much interested in his work that he proposed to buy the entire collection for the French nation. Then came the Revolution of 1848 and, fortunately for America, the sale fell through.

Catlin returned to the United States and later visited South America and Central America to paint the Indians of those countries. Although his last years were spent in poverty, he presented to the Smithsonian his entire collection, so that future generations of his fellow-Americans might enjoy the record of an era that was rapidly passing. He died in Jersey City, N. J., on December 22, 1872, at the age of 76.

SYNOPSIS

Don Alfredo, wealthy, Spanish owner of a Southern California rancho, refuses to heed several warnings of a raid by a band of outlaw, Sierra Indians. One day after he has finally decided to seek the protection of the nearby mission for his wife and family, the Indians strike. Don Alfredo is killed and his two young daughters are torn from the arms of the family's faithful maid, Monica, and are carried away to the hills. Padre Pasqual, missionary friend of the family, arrives at the ruins of the ranch and learns the story of the raid from Monica. After a trying and difficult trip across the plains and mountains from Texas to California, youthful Henry Bowle, a Texas adventurer, with his friends, Ben Pardaloe and Simmie, an Indian scout, sight the party of Indians who have carried off the two little girls. Don Alfredo, wealthy, Spanish owner of a

"Never mind the few. Fifty is plenty and we-three!"

"Don't worry, Ben," counseled Bowie. "They haven't got us yet." The three Texans were seasoned in tracking and scouting. Pursuing their long way down the canyon, they scattered when nearing the war party and, after appointing a rendezvous, disposed themselves so that each could best scout for himself the camp's activities.

After a time Bowie reached the rendezvous first. Pardaloe straggled cautiously in with Simmie just be-

"Simmie's right," murmured Bowie. "They have two bound prisoners. They must be saved before they're knocked in the head.'

The Creek was not hopeful. "One of 'em tried to set up. An Injun knocked him right over."

'Well, boys, I don't know how you feel," said Bowie, "but I'm not golng to let these redskins eat two white folks. I'm going into them.' "You'll never come out, Henry," predicted the scout. "Maybe no, maybe yes. Who can tell? What do you say, Ben?" "I say steal a few ponies and make fast tracks away from the

"Want to go in with us, Ben?" asked Bowie

"Bound to go, are you, Henry?" "I am."

The scout shifted his empty cheeks around mournfully on an imaginary quid. "Well, I enlisted for the expedish, Henry. Guess I'm under orders.' They discussed rapidly one plan of attack after another. All agreed that the important thing for their own welfare was a supply of horses. To take but a few of these would be to invite the savages' pursuit. The bunch, Bowie declared, must be stampeded in the melee. "But if you stampede the ponies," said Pardaloe, "who's going to catch 'em? We'll be footin' it again."

"The only way to cover that," Bowie continued, "would be for Simmie to sneak in and hobble five of those saddled horses before the alarm's given."

"Henry's got it all laid out, Simmie," commented Ben Pardaloe skeptically. "I don't think so much of an advance stampede," admitted Bowie. "If we clean out the Indians we'll take their horses. If they clean us him. The long, heavy steel bar out we shan't need horses. I'm depending on the night surprise and the gunfire—and the old Texas yell -long and loud. There's a moon tonight. CHAPTER IV

To attack a victorious war party of fifty-odd Indians would have seemed a mad undertaking, even a century ago, to any but Texan frontiersmen - men who took long chances and relied chiefly on wit and resource to meet an emergency.

But these three men, two of them. at least, young in years though veterans in frontier fighting, canvassed the situation pretty thoroughly in their discussion. The Indians would never have stopped to camp in midafternoon had they not been sure that they were safe from further They had chosen a spot easily defended and were evidently giving themselves a rest to gorge a big supper.

"You can see, Ben," said Bowie to brace up his scout, "these devils have been chased hard. They think it's all over—they think they're safe.

they'll make first thing for the horses. Take your deerskin strips. Simmie, we'll have to wait till we hear from you. Give us your signals now.'

"The owl," suggested Simmie. "If it rains that's no good," ob-ected Pardaloe. "Owls sing low jected Pardaloe. when it rains."

"So do rifles with priming pans," added Bowie. "But a Colt gun works, wet or dry. And darkness doesn't help bows and arrows any.'

Going over every angle of the coming encounter, and with Bowie giving directions as to how to meet every emergency he could think of, the Texans slowly and cautiously walked down the long ridge that led toward the Indian camp. The sky was already overcast, and the short southern twilight soon plunged the canyon into black night, relieved only by the two fires burning in mid-camp. Reaching a hiding point close behind the horses but overlooking the camp and well within sound of its voices, Bowie and Pardaloe disposed themselves behind a rock whence they could spring instantly into action. The half-breed stole stealthily away and was at once lost in the darkness.

Rain borne in on a west wind was beginning to spit, and the twain in hiding covered their rifle pans with the skirts of their buckskin jackets. To await in the secrecy of night a concerted signal; to attune the ears to painful alertness while trying to strain out the murmur of human voices, lest the soft coo of the false owl be lost; to watch with straining eyes every move of the milling savages as they threw themselves down to sleep-all of this kept the two Texans pitched high in anxiety. An hour must still pass before Simmie could act, and it passed fearfully slowly.

Finally Pardaloe muttered, What's happened to Simmie?" "I don't know what has happened to Simmie, but something has happened to the horses," whispered Bowie. "Listen!" The neigh of a pony caused the exclamation. An answering trampling and million of the horses declared trouble to the ears of Bowie and his scout. But what was it all about? Before such a question could be asked the crack of a pistol instead of the coo of an owl caused the two to spring to their feet. The camp was already stirring.

"Hold your fire," ordered Bowie in an undertone. "Get in front of the horses, quick." The two scrambled hastily to the position they wanted and threw their rifles to their shoulders. "Take the second fellowup," shouted Bowie. "I'll get the first." The two rifles cracked almost together. "Yell!" cried Bowie to Pardaloe, setting a fine example himself.

Simmie ran up from behind. With an earsplitting ferocity he raised his own voice. The Indians now came on the dead run for the horses, brandishing tomahawks. The warriors were met by the bullets from two pistols and the revolver. The onslaught of the Indians proved disastrous to themselves. Simmie jumped into action with his hatchet, seconded by the fire of his com-panions. The savages recoiled panions. Bowie, dodging hatchets as best he could, ran in to where the captives lay. Here three warriors stood their ground and attacked him. Bowie, clubbing his empty rifle, laid about break. Let's get going.' The Texans were in strange country, but they were old in frontier ways, and they let the horses jog along, confident that they would get them out of the mountains, through the foothills and to open country if they were let alone.

Much to the relief of the refugees, the rain clouds scattered at daybreak. The air was clear and chill. The men saw dimly before them, as far as the eye could reach, a rolling country and, rising out of the morning shadows on the western horizon, a vast expanse of sea. Bowie shouted and pointed. "The ocean, boys! The Pacific! It's California!

There was less enthusiasm from his comrades. Simmie grinned because he was pleased with whatever pleased everybody. Pardaloe stared vacantly. His ponderous jaws moved slowly and spasmodically on an imaginary chew of tobacco.

'Ben, you don't seem enthusiastic over the new country," said Bowie. 'Man alive, don't you know you're now in the land of plenty? That you're where Dan'l Boone wanted to lay his bones? Where you'll see Kit Carson after a while."

"Kit Carson?" echoed Pardaloe. "Himself. He's out here some-

There may be a deer in that timber across the creek. I'll sneak over there myself as soon as we get the girls fixed up. Help me with this one, Simmie."

Simmie handed the child to him. Her eyes were closed. Bowie examined her as he chafed her hands. She seemed asleep. Overcome by the long strain of deadly fear and extreme fatigue, wet and weary though she was, nature had asserted To awaken her now-to be sure she was only sleeping-he chafed her temples. Pardaloe, following instructions, did the same for his charge. The younger girl began to sob faintly—as if all strength had already been spent in anxiety and tears. The sobbing awakened her older sister, who slowly opened her eyes, and, as he bent over her, she looked into Bowie's

In spite of himself, he started. The child's eyes were dark, large, gentle, yet they came as a shock. In a brief confusion he could only realize that he had never seen such eyes. They rested on him for only a moment, then their tranquil light changed to dread, and as they closed on the face bent above her tears rolled from under the long lashes. He placed her so she could sit partially upright with her back against a small sycamore.

He worked so long with his charge that Pardaloe became impatient and, priming his rifle afresh, started off after something for breakfast,

Despite the savagely cruel treatment of the child, the ravages of distress and weeping, the frock in disarray, the disheveled hair, the scratched and bruised legs and arms, the features pitifully streaked with soil and caked with tears, something told Bowie that this voungster was not a common waif.

Pardaloe came out of the chaparral with a doe slung over his shoulder, and while Simmie started a fire, Bowie rummaged some of the Spanish loot recovered from the war party. It had been carried in a buckskin bag, and in this he found a large mug, curiously chased, and from the brawling stream below the camp he brought good water.

He had left the younger of the girls lying on the ground near the elder. On his return he found the younger lying with her head in the lap of the elder, and he imagined them sisters.

But what surprised him most was the expression of deadly fear in the eyes of the elder girl as he walked toward her, holding the cup of water in his hand. When she saw him approaching she quickly drew the little sister closer to her breast as if suspecting an effort to part them. Bowie smiled to show his friendliness: the gesture meant nothing to the frightened stranger. With every step he took her pitiful dread ircreased. When he bent down on one knee and held out the water she grew hysterical, closed her eyes tight and turned her head away. He laughed and spoke. "Don't be afraid. This is only water for you to drink.' The words drew no response. "Of course," he said to himself, "she knows no English. What can I do?" The panic-stricken child would not look up. Bowie perceived it must be a trial of endurance. While Simmie and Pardaloe were roasting the saddle of venison at the fire Bowie sat in front of the girls, watching them and thinking. After a time he looked toward his older charge. She was

"This"-he pointed to the cup-"is water. See!" He held the cup to his lips, drank a little and poured a little on the ground. Some advantage, he perceived, had been gained; she no longer averted her head but timidly watched him. Yet every time he held out the cup she turned her face. He could only laugh and keep trying; she was equally persistent in refusing.

Smiling, Bowie called to Simmie,
"Slice off a little strip of that venison and bring it here, Simmie. Perhaps it's hunger she feels."

Again he suffered defeat. She would have none of the roasted meat held temptingly before her on the point of a stout twig. Bowie took a little bite of the meat himself to prove it was good. No signs, gestures or supplications moved his stubborn captive.

Discouraged and annoyed, Bowie walked down to where Pardaloe was finishing his ample venison breakfast. "Come over here, Ben," said Bowie testily. "See whether you can make this girl eat or drink. I can't do a thing with her."

The efforts of the tall awkward scout to make an impression were more spectacular but not more successful. His antics drew laughs from his companions but the child only quailed.

"She thinks you're crazy, Ben," murmured Simmie appraisingly.
"Hold on, boys," exclaimed Bowie suddenly. "I'll bet I've got the key to this puzzle. Stand away." He picked up the cup of water, looked intently at the child whose searching eyes were fixed on his own, and, holding out the cup, made

New Silk Jersey Gives Illusion Of Slim, Sculptured Silhouette

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

VOU will take the straight and narrow path for fall, but in effect You will do it by means of illusion caused by the artifices of slimming silk jersies, of draping, subtle goring and intricate cut that achieves the effect of simple, slender straightness without losing one feminine curve, one iota of grace or walking comfort.

Right at the head of the silk parade of fall fashions comes daytime dresses, evening gowns, blouses, headgear, cunning little evening shawls and innumerable other accessory items made of silk jersey. For draping and achieving sculpturesque "lines," there is nothing in the entire fabric realm comparable to supple, lovely silk jersey. Gray silk jersey is endorsed throughout the entire style parade, starting with blouses that will take you from luncheon right through to cocktails and important little dinners. For the most part these have long fitted sleeves, although the below-elbow length is also favored. The attractive blouse to the left in the illustration is typical. It is made with a high neck and curved seams running toward the armhole in front, in order to secure the cowl drapery in pretty precision. sleeves are long and modish. The draped Persian silk turban gives just the right dash of color to glorify this exceeding chic blouse.

Bewitching are the dark silk jersey afternoon dresses. Because of the slim fall of the material, skirts are cut slightly fuller and there is bodices that will flatter every type of figure. See to the right in the group a black silk jersey daytime dress. Here the new long torso sculpture draping interprets current styling at its best. The American designer Kievette created this dress

Sleek and sleeved dinner gowns of silk jersey made with molded torsos and sculpturesque drapery in the inimitable Alix manner call forth the plaudits of the fashion world. Romance and loveliness and feminine allure are at their height in a gown of soft gray-tone silk jersey as shown centered in the group. The bodice has a deep V-neck with much drapery coming from the shoulder to give fullness over the bust. The straight-falling generously full skirt slims into lines of infinite grace. Long sleeves accent the new "covered-up" look so definitely high-fashion for dinner gowns this season. The wide figure-flattering, tight draped midriff is enhanced by buckles jeweled with lovely pink

Bi-colored silk jersey evening owns continue to be fashion firsts. hese have bodice and apron drapery in one color with midriff and skirt in another, in such dramatic combinations as flame red with black, accessoried with jet jewelry. Black magic also continues in gowns fashioned with sheer silk jersey tops with silk crepe for the skirt or black transparent lace bodices topping heavy black silk jersey skirts—enchanting and slightly wicked. A "word to the wise" about caring for your silk jersey garments. Because it is a knit fabric, it is out flat in a drawer. And did you know that silk jersey practically never requires pressing as the "live" elasticity of silk reduces wrinkle to a minimum? In case an iron does have to be used, be sure just to place the iron on the spot you wish to press without rubbing back and forth, which would stretch the fabric. Silk jersey cleans beautifully, too, for the inherent characteristics of the fiber means that much shirred and draped detail in | if the garment is properly cared for, it will not bag or sag or pull at the seams, but will return to its original size and shape. Delightful to wear under winter coats is sleek silken jersey, never too warm, never too cool—just right! (Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

Spotted Furs Have Become the Vogue

If you keep seeing "spots before your eyes" don't be alarmed. It is simply fashion making a demonstration of what's what in fur coats and fur trimmings.

The tremendous vogue for leopard and ocelot and other of the spotted type pelts is developing almost to an epidemic of spots. When in doubt as to the fur to enhance your new cloth coat, use the spotted kind and you will be fashion correct. The way spotted furs will crowd the grandstand this year is something to marvel at. There will be entire coats of leopard or ocelot. There will be muff and neckpiece sets with matching hats of the spotted fur. There will be more than that, for huge pockets of spotted fur are adorning cloth coats.
