THE NEWSPAPER MAN

In The American Press
R. E. PEATTIE

If you want a receipt for that popular mystery
Known to the world as a newspaper man,
Take all the wonderful persons in history,
Jumble them up in the best way you can:
The talent of Dickens portraying humanity,
Punch of a Dempsey in landing a blow,
The wit of Mark Twain without his profanity,
Gift of Belasco in staging a show,
The boldness of Shaw in exposing quackery,
The push of a Pershing pursuing a foe,
The knowledge of Johnson, the satire of Thackeray,
Restraint of a Howells, the weirdness of Poe,
The force of Mcaulay without his verbosity,
The craft of a Caesar in conquering Gaul,
The detail of Zola without his atrocity,
Firmness of faith like another St. Paul;
An Oslar, a Mayo, a Flexner in medicine,
Grace of Pavlova conducting a dance,
In physics an Einstein, or even an Edison,
The sardonic humor of Anatole France;
Much of tenacity, none of mendacity,
But honesty, courage and great perspicacity.
Take of each element all that's reducible,
Mix them and stir them the best that you can,
Watch the result when you empty the crucible;
The residuum is a newspaper man.

PROTEST BILL TO CUT STATE SCHOOL HELP

At the annual assembly of the Kent County Adult Education Centers, held last night in the public school at Frederica, protests were voiced against House bill 343, relative to certain employees of the State Board of Education, which was passed by the House on Wednesday and sent to the Senate.

The occasion was a regular meeting and the annual demonstration of the activities of the adult education centers all over Kent county. About 300 persons were present, representing several communities of the county. Of this number, 320 attended a preliminary banquet.

A. F. Walker, president of the Kent County Advisory Council and chairman of the meeting, called attention to the bill here referred to. He spoke of the danger that threatens the educational progress of the State through the enactment of this legislation on matters that are the recognized prerogatives of the State Board of Education, such as the amount and nature of supervision, subjects to be included in the curriculum, etc.

The bill under consideration prohibits the board employing more than one assistant superintendent and more than one supervisor in each county.

Mrs. Henry Ridgely Harrington, of Dover, who also spoke at last night's meeting, stated that the passage of legislation of this type would place the public schools of Delaware where they were in 1916. She emphasized the fact that nobody was questioning the need of economy, but how and where these economies should be practiced within the educational system were matters to be determined by the properly constituted authorities for the purpose, the State Board of Education.

Howard T. Ennis, president of the State Parent-Teacher Association, said that the organization which he represented was gravely concerned with the danger resulting from this form of legislation.

The program given last night was varied and interesting. There was community singing, chorus singing and addresses. Recreational activities comprised a feature of the program also. Greetings were voiced by representatives of various organizations that are co-operating in the adult education work.

Communities represented were Harrington, Caesar Rodney, Cheswold, Clayton, Dover, Farmington, Frederica, Leipsic, Magnolia, Raughley's, Smyrna, Tomahawk, Viola and Willow Grove.

SWEET CLOVER FOR PASTURE

In connection with the program for the improvement of the pasture and hay crops in Kent county special attention has been given by County Agent Russell E. Wilson during the past five years to the cultural requirements of sweet clover since it is well adapted to the different types of soil, and it also has a very high value as a suitable pasture for dairy cattle and other livestock.

As sweet clover is primarily a pasture crop, it is not generally used for hay because of the coarseness of the plant, although it may be cut for hay about the first week in September of the same year in which it is seeded; provided that it has had a normal growing season and the plants are not so coarse in texture as to render the hay unpalatable.

The seed may be sown in either the spring or the fall, but for this section of the United States the spring seeding is advisable. Unhulled seed is sown principally in Kentucky, Alabama and Mississippi, as the limestone soils of those regions appear to be naturally adapted to this clover. A large percentage of the unhulled seed sown in the South is seeded during January and the first part of February with satisfactory results, but good stands are seldom obtained from unhulled seed south of the latitude of Washington, D. C., when the seed is sown later than the middle of February. Since the use of unhulled seed has usually been attended with failure in the northern sections of the United States, farmers in this area have been advised to use the hulled seed which is the kind most generally sold throughout the country as a whole.

The usual rate of seeding is from 15 to 20 pounds per acre, although the quantity may be reduced if alsike or timothy should be mixed with the sweet clover as a means of providing an earlier pasture than this clover will furnish the first year when seeded alone. Sweet clover that is sown this spring will not make sufficient growth to permit its being pastured until the latter part of August or the first week in September, but the following spring the crop will be ready for pasturing by the first or second week in May.

Lime and seed inoculation are two very important factors in the successful culture of sweet clover, and it is also a recognized fact that that good seed is the basis of profitable returns from any crop, and this is true especially with regard to clover seed. For this section of the United States it is recommended that the white blossom variety be used.

If the market price for whole milk continues to decline in this area, dairymen will be forced to consider more than ever before the growing of those pasture and hay crops which will result in the lowering of the cost of producing milk, and sweet clover and alfalfa seem to be one answer to this problem. More farmers in Kent county each year are making use of these legumes, as indicated by the increased acreage of these crops along with other clovers.

The fox hunters of lower Delaware and Maryland followed the baying of Park Brown's hound into Slaughter Hall here Wednesday evening—and lo, a banquet of the old-fashioned, catch as catch-can, grab-all-you-can-and-swaller variety awaited them. There was more than enough to go 'round, but Park, whose arms are long, was served first. Everett T. (Puss) Messick was the toastmaster, and in reminiscent mood, told of the days when he followed the hounds in Merrie England. Harry Murphy favored the audience with several solos, and Pete Shaw, baritone, whose dogs finished away back in the hunt of the day before, rendered "Where, Oh, Where Has My Little Dog Gone?" Brief talks were given by F. R. Grier, of Milford; Kirwin F. Evergam, of Denton, Md.; J. O. Williams, Federalsburg, Md.; Morris Harrington, Felton; G. R. Bennett, Milford; Elmer Orune, Denton, Md. and Pete Shaw, of Harrington.

State Crop Acreage About Same

Under present plans of Delaware farmers, the acreage devoted to the various crops of the State will this year be substantially the same as last year, planting intention figures of the department of agriculture show.

Delaware farmers are planning to plant about 147,000 acres of corn, 7000 acres of sweet potatoes and 33,000 acres of soy beans this year, the department reports. These figures are the same as those of last year.

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

Washington. — The banking crisis through which the nation is passing illustrates better than any other time in the history of the country the danger of a sudden change in the methods of dealing with the problems, for those methods show clearly how a misstep or a slip would wreck all that has been accomplished, including restoration of public confidence.

It has been, and continues to be, an ordeal by fire or whatever methods they used of old as a test, for President Roosevelt and his secretary of the treasury, William H. Woodin. Thus far, Mr. Woodin has retained his sense of humor, and it appears due to that fact alone that he has been able to last under the strain of the perilous period.

As time passes since the memorable night of March 5, when the President, by proclamation, closed the country's banks, and when he called the Congress into extraordinary session, it became more evident that the country could not know the real danger of the situation at its worst. That accounts for much of the secrecy experienced during the several days succeeding March 5, when the treasury was unable to tell fully what was happening.

There had to be a period in which to survey the situation and consider as quietly as frightened men could, what the best course was.

In other words, to save the banking structure from wreckage and hold the currency of the nation up in the faith of the people, drastic action was required.

It became evident immediately after the decision had been reached to close the banks until legislative remedies could be enacted, that the most difficult job lay ahead. The banks could not be closed with ease, but they could not be opened with the same celerity. So a group of earnest men, government officials, bankers and economists, set to work to find out the way.

Those men recognized that public confidence was shaken. It had been disturbed by isolated cases such as had occurred in Michigan and in Maryland. These had resulted in hundreds of thousands of people rushing to the banks to withdraw their money. That was natural. Whether it was right or wrong to be a hoarder does not figure here. The condition happened, and in order to reopen the banks, there had to be a measure of confidence re-established.

There is where the emergency banking legislation enters the picture. It proposed to make sufficient funds available so that the banks could have all of the cash they needed to pay out when their depositors called for it. Unless the banks could do that, there was no use to reopen them; if they could do that, nearly all of us were made to feel that there was no necessity for taking our money out of the bank, except, of course, the money that we had to spend for food and clothes and ordinary expenses.

Secretary Woodin several times has expressed his amazement at the calm demeanor of the people in the crisis. He said he believed that no other people in the world would have accepted the situation with the same philosophical calmness and understanding that marked their attitude in the circumstance of a Presidential order that closed all banks at one stroke of the pen. It made solution of the problem much easier. Of that there can be no doubt. He counseled further patience until things are normal.

It may be several months before banking, as we have known it in normal times, will be operating again. But that should not be discouraging. The banking operations that are not going to go forward as they used to will be of the type that does not interfere with the bulk of the folks. Ordinary transactions can even now be carried out through the banks without the slightest hitch. The story it tells is one of accomplishing what many observers here feared were insurmountable difficulties when they first arose.

There was that met that was not written for the metropolitan press in the stress of the perilous week of March 5. Things happened so fast and the dangers were so grave that many trained newspaper correspondents found themselves at a loss to present the picture. They were handicapped, of course, by the secrecy that the officials found necessary and consequently there was confusion. Hence, it appears likely that some months must elapse before there can be an analysis of the circumstances. At least, there must be more time before we can learn from the experience of those events what the lessons were and what can be done to prevent a recurrence of the dangers and the wise moves, if there were such in the decisions of the administration.

ought not to be any bad effects, according to the experts on money questions.

President Roosevelt is going forward in carrying out his promises to reorganize the government as though his promises he intended to accomplish something.

Hinds are falling everywhere; new faces are appearing with a suddenness that is quite unusual even after a change in administration, and plans are being formulated that are announced as definitely in the direction of money saving in the cost of government.

It must be stated, however, that the appointments thus far, for the most part, have been generally recognized as "plums." They are the higher-ups. Some animosity is being aroused, and it is possible that it will spread to congress where politicians want, and are counting upon, their share of the pie.

Rifts may result. At any rate, the President has moved boldly on his appointments, thus far, just as he moved with boldness in dealing with the banking crisis.

Attention should be called, in passing, however, that in the banking crisis, Secretary Woodin relied to an amazing extent upon the advice and cooperation of the men who had preceded him in charge of the treasury. Ogden L. Mills, former secretary, has participated in all of the many conferences; Arthur A. Ballantine, former under secretary, has been at Mr. Woodin's elbow throughout the crisis, and John Douglas, the fiscal assistant secretary, has been on the job night and day.

Respecting this sharing of the labor, there is gossip around Washington that Mr. Mills and his associates had worked out the program for closing the banks and for their reopening on a new basis, just as has been done, but that President Roosevelt, while still President-elect, declined to sanction the plan. None knows, of course, whether this is true. It can be dismissed, therefore, as being among the things that are most interesting, if true.

The new administration, apparently, is going to have nothing to do with crop price stabilization.

No Crop Price Henry Morgenthau Jr., who is the new chairman of the Federal Farm board, is dead set against it. He wants to get the government out of the field as quickly as he can. And with the power he is understood to have from the hands of the President, there remains little chance that Mr. Morgenthau contemplates indulging in any operations such as the previous Farm board employed to keep prices up.

It might be said in connection with Mr. Morgenthau's appointment, that eventually he will blossom out as the agricultural spokesman for the President. He may even overshadow the secretary of agriculture, Henry A. Wallace.

That, of course, is a guess, but President Roosevelt wants to amalgamate all of the various agencies having to do with farm credit and make them function as one unit. Supervision of this work is slated to be placed in Mr. Morgenthau's hands, and it takes no stretch of the imagination to foresee the trend of events.

Shower Baths for Locomotives

The compulsory shower bath method used at modern swimming pools has been adopted by the Canadian National railways for cleaning passenger locomotives. The locomotive is moved to and fro through a gate composed of strong spurting jets of water, as shown in the above photograph. Locomotives are given a thorough shower bath after every run. It has been found that in addition to adding to their appearance, this regular washing of locomotives also adds to their life.

Discovers Life Exists in Meteors

California Scientist Silent as to Conclusions.

Berkeley, Calif.—Proof that life—if only living bacteria—exists on other planets? Where and how did terrestrial life originate? Meteor fragments in which he discovered the bacteria were obtained from the American Museum of Natural History, the United States National Museum, and the Colorado Museum of Natural History.

Two types of bacterial growth have been found in the interior substance of meteorites, he revealed. Although the California scientist carefully refrained from drawing any conclusions from his findings, it was pointed out that his research may help provide answers for two of the great riddles of the universe:

International Date Line
Halfway around the world from the "given meridian" at Greenwich is an imaginary line running from pole to pole which marks the place where each day begins. It follows the 180th meridian except where it deviates to avoid division of countries or islands. Such a plan eliminates the confusion that would otherwise result.

They were tearing down the great buildings on Lake Street as I passed along that avenue not long ago. Well constructed buildings they were, too, and put up within my memory, and on the cleared ground there would shortly be erected something far more pretentious, more elegant, better suited to the needs of the day.

The men who erected the structures being dismantled might shake their heads in disapproval, but progress in anything means throwing aside the old and taking on the new. Nothing worth while stays put.

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

The reclaiming of rooms through changed decoration is something which at one time or another falls to the lot of almost every home decorator.

A Bookcase, Dressing Table and Bench, and Footstool, All of Which Any Woman Can Make by Following Directions Given.

do it occasionally. It is she, really, who has all the time to make one room appear like another. It is amazing how successfully some home decorators alter appearances of rooms at a moment's notice from living room to bedroom, from kitchen to dining room, etc.

It is when a room undergoes a permanent change of use that it has to be reclaimed through change of furniture. Or it may be that some unused room is needed and must be made into some specific type, chamber, sewing room, den, etc., with a little more furniture and furnishings than are to be gathered from other rooms in a home.

Ingenious Changes.
It is seldom an easy matter. No room can have too much robbed from it to go into the new room lest neither appears well furnished. To avoid buying articles the home decorator must be ingenious and inventive to save money without appearing to do so.

so that they fall in graceful folds to the floor. A bench can be made in this same way to form the seat before the dressing table. This style of furnishing is much in vogue today, so no appearance of economy is suggested.

Boxes can be transformed into bookcases for den or living room by supplying the boxes with shelves. These can rest on large screw-eyes at back and front of sides. On top of each four so placed at exactly the same height, one shelf can rest. Four shelves, or even three are sufficient.

Paint the bookcase the color of the woodwork in the room or stain it mahogany and give it a coat of dull varnish.

A small box with clothes hooks for feet makes a smart footstool. Cover the sides of the box with upholstery fabric and the top too after wadding it. Or chintz can be used for upholstery if the foot rest is for a chamber or sun parlor.
