Modernized Covered Wagon Is 'Home' for This Family

"Home," says Jim Stewart, "is whatever you make it." So Jim and the wife, together with the five little Stewarts, began keeping house in the vehicle shown here drawn by two Clydesdale horses. The Stewarts recently left their home in Watrous, Saskatchewan, en route to Montreal. But because the drifts were too deep on eastern Canadian roads, they ducked into the United States and around the Great Lakes where the going is better. Stewart got his home-on-wheels idea from the modern automobile trailer, which goes faster but doesn't provide as much opportunity to watch the passing scenery.

"May!" exclaimed Feter, "It sounds just like the humming of Busy Bee." has been very scarce Striped Chipmunk doesn't mind. He comes out in the spring as saucy and pert as ever. He has had plenty to eat all winter and it always makes him smile when some of his neighbors tell him that he was lucky. He knows better. There was no luck about it. He worked hard, ever so hard, to store away that food and make sure that he had plenty. Many and many a time the little people of the Green Meadows have thought that Reddy Fox would surely be caught by Bowser the Hound and when Reddy has escaped they have said that he was lucky. Nothing of the kind! Reddy had just used his wits and fooled Bowser the Hound. So there isn't nearly so much luck in this world as some people think. Most of what people call good luck is nothing but the result of hard work or smart wits or both; and most of what people call bad luck is nothing but the result of carelessness or laziness or stupidity. But sometimes it seems as if there is such a thing as real luck. It was that way with Peter Rabbit when he tried to follow Busy Bee to her storehouse in the Green Forest. He saw her start from the sweet clover patch out on the Green Meadows. She went up until she was only a tiny speck and then she started in a straight line for the Green Forest. He saw her start from the sweet clover patch out on the Green Meadows. She went up until she was only a tiny speck and then she started in a straight line for the Green Forest and Peter started after her. But he hadn't made three jumps before he found that he must look where he was going, and he couldn't do that and look up in the sky at the same time. "Anyway," said Peter to himself, "she flew in this direction and there is no place for a storehouse until she reaches the Green Forest."

a penny cheaper that way. Fred MacMurray saves razor blades to be resharpened. Martha Raye wears sturdy, service-weight stockings except on gala occasions.

Most thrifty of all is Marlene Dietrich. She is a string saver. Her maid is always wrapping up packages for her to take to the studio and the string comes in handy.

Al Pearce celebrated the beginning of his second year with his present radio sponsor and his eleventh year on the air in his own peculiar fashion. He gave his orchestra leader a rubber baton so there would be no stiffness in his rhythms and presented himself with the most enormous news camera you ever saw.

When Fred Astaire returned from vacation to the R. K. O. studio recently to start work on his next picture with Ginger Rogers, he found the amusement park set of "Damsel in Distress" still standing. Kindly guy that he is, he arranged to buy all the slides and games and sent them to an orphans' home.

Errol Flynn did not even stop to hear congratulations on his grand performance in "Robin Hood." The minute the preview was over and he was told that no retakes were necessary, he hopped a plane to Boston where he bought a seventy-five foot boat (a ketch if you will be technical about it) in which he sailed off to the Bahamas for some fishing.

Benny, Burns and Allen, and Bob Burns play serious dramatic roles on the air. Paul Whiteman fol-lowed that up by presenting Helen Vinson as a concert pianist. Bing Crosby lets Fay Wray blow tunes on a sweet potato and Olivia de Haviland plays chopsticks.

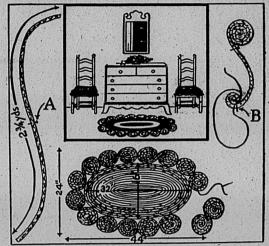

ODDS AND ENDS—Kate Smith has received an autographed copy of Eleanor Rooseveli's newest book from the President's wife herself... Louise Fazenda rounds out her twentieth year of motion-picture making with "Swing Your Lady" and just for fun she is dashing around the country, slipping into theaters from New York to Texas and listening to audience comments... The cook book which radio's mystery chef sends to listeners has been requested by the wives of 21 United States senators, the widous of two Presidents and stewards of the royal household in England ... Edward G. Robinson is so pleased over his success on the radio that he is much more thrilled when fans call him "Swe Wilson" than he is when they hall him as "Little Caesar" or any of his other gangster roles ... The picture Robert Taylor made in England was previewed in a little California town and people who were there report that it will make him the outstanding favorite of the stage.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK... By Lemuel F. Parton

NEW YORK.—Many a good news yarn has been spoiled by the necessity of "getting the story in the lead," as they say in the newspaper shops. This reporter asks in this one for the end, noting merely that it is a happy ending. In recent years, there have been so many unhappy fade-outs, from Sam Langford to the League of Nations, that anything in the line of an unexpected Garrison finish rates a bit of suspense before the news pay-off.

In Maxwell street, Chicago, long suspense before the news pay-off.

In Maxwell street, Chicago, long before the fragrance of Bubbly creek ebbed and sank and saddened, there was a book-stall which was the Jewish Algonquin of those parts. The place was overrun with philosophers, some white-bearded and highly venerated, some young and contentious, all stirred by a feverish intellectual zeal. They wolfed new books and started clamorous arguments about them, the way the crowds at the big pool hall down the street grabbed the box scores in the late sporting extras. Sweatshop workers used to throng in after a hard day's work and get in on the seminar.

calling out the militia because Bisno happened along to referee an argument.

He was a sweatshop worker, a man of amazing erudition, but of salty, colloquial speech, never enmeshed in the tangle of print language around him. He used to tease his friend, Jane Addams, of nearby Hull house, by calling her settlement workers "the paid neighbors of the poor." He liked to deflate the Utopians, boiling things down to Gresham's law of money, the law of diminishing returns, weighted averages or something like that. He was the first of a multitude of sweatshop economists who spread light and learning through Chicago's Ghetto.

Bisno had a bright-eyed, clever little daughter named Beatrice, one of several children. Old sages, up and down Max-Our Ken to say the world would hear from Beatrice some day. But the world went to war, regardless of Sir Norman Angell and all the other philosophers, and the Bisnos passed beyond the ken of this writer.

About twelve years ago, I had a visit from Francis Oppenheimer, a New York journalist. Beatrice Bisno was his wife. She was going to write a book, and did I know of a quiet hide-out where she could write it? I sent them to the old Hotel Helvetia, No. 23 Rue de Tournon, in Paris. She sat in the nearly Luxembourgh garden and wrote her book.

They came home and the book made endless round trips to publishers' offices. The smash of 1920

I had a letter from Francis Oppenheimer.

"We finally threw the book in an old clothes basket," he said. "Then, acting on impulse, we used our dinner money to give it one more ride. Weeks passed. Beatrice fell ill. There came a letter from Liveright, the publisher. I knew it was another rejection and didn't was another rejection and didn't I tore open the envelope and handed it to her. Her eyes were glazed. She could not read the letter. It slipped from her fingers and fell to the floor."

And in the same mail today, there

And in the same mail today, there came to this desk a copy of the new book, "To-morrow's Bread," by Beatrice Bisno, winning the $2,500 prize award, the judges being Dorothy Canfield Fisher and Fannie Hurst. That was the news that Mr. Oppenheimer picked up from the floor when his wife was too ill to read it.

Dorothy Canfield Fisher says of the book: "A searchingly realistic portrait of an idealist. What an idealist does to the world and what the world does to an idealist is here set down with power and sincerity."

Winsome little Bisno is gone. One wishes he could be carrying the news down to the old Maxwell street book stall, if it's still there.

New Orleans Begins Celebrating Famed Mardi Gras for IIIth Time

Brought from Paris by a Gay Group of Students in 1827, This Age-Old European Festival, Elaborately Developed in an American Setting, Has Added to the Renown of the Louisiana Metropolis as the Carnival Capital of Two Hemispheres.

mus, Proteus, and Hermes.

Although the carnival season swings along at moderate tempo after its opening with the January 6 ball, it develops into a merry whirl that leads from the ball-a-week pace to a ball a night during the final week, winding up with both the Comus and Rex balls in a merger of splendor.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

OWN in "N'Yawlins" (or perhaps you call it "Nu Orluns" or "New Orleens") they're getting ready to celebrate a festival which has made the Louisiana metropolis the carnival capital of two hemispheres. It's the Mardi Gras, that ostentatious pageant which, like a fairy tale come true, parades year after year through the streets of that picturesque old Louisiana city where the old blends with the new in such bewildering fashion.

Each year the splendor, pomp and pageantry of the Mardi Gras increases and this year the city is spending lavishly to create a spectacular demonstration that will remain alive in the memoremain alive in the memo-ries of the multitude of rev-elers until next year's cele-bration rolls 'round again. To be celebrated against the background of Louisiana's new era of golden prosperity, the result of the "fair play to industry" program instituted by Gov. Richard W. Leche a little more than a year ago, the 1938 Mardi Gras is expected to be more spectacular than at any previous time in its history of more than a the celebration has already begun.

It started in slow tempo on January 6, but from now on the pace quickens and it will reach its height of joyousness on Mardi Gras day, which is "Fat Tuesday" or Shrove Tuesday.

This year Mardi Gras day falls on March 1, thus giving revelry in New Orleans free swing for 53 days and nights. But at the dawn of Ash Wednesday, the beginning of the solemn, penitential period of Lent, the frolics die down, the merrymakers depart and the city once more settles down to the leisurely pace which is New Orleans for ten months of the year—awaiting another Mardi Gras.

balls in a merger of splendor.

Spectacular night parades staged by the secret societies cater to the visiting crowds. The carnival reaches its acme on Mardi Gras day with the street parade of the Krewe of Rex. The procession, formed by a score of floats and several thousand attendants, strings for five miles through the city along historic, crowd-thronged St. Charles and Canal streets. Canal streets.

Floats, on which months of work have been spent by artist and artisan, are drawn by white mules arrayed in holiday trappings. The floats, breath-taking in their beauty, are fashioned to in its history of more than a century.

In this year's carnival the lighthearted Creoles of Louisiana are preparing to acclaim the good times the state is enjoying as a result of an industrial expansion which has brought $47,000,000 for new capital there in a little more than a year, largely due to the "salesmanship" of Governor Leche, himself a descendant of an old Creole family and at thirty-nine, one of the youngest state executives in the nation.

Although most people have the idea that the Mardi Gras is a one-day celebration when thousands of visitors from all states and many foreign lands join with the citizenry of New Orleans in their merry-making, this is only partly true. As a matter of fact, the celebration has already begun.

It started in slow tempo on government" which carries out its arrangements for the carnival steeped in mystery. Each of the secret societies numbers from 150 to 200 men, generally club men and those prominent in social and civic affairs. Usually 100 are selected to appear in the public displays, and for the most part the others remain in the background directing the colossal pageant.

The preparations for one display require almost a year. Torch lights of one master Mardi Gras pageant hardly die when work is begun to fashion another carnival, still under the cover of strict secrecy. The first step after the curtain has dropped upon Mardi Gras is a meeting for the selection of a design committee for the next carnival, and a captain is chosen with supreme power of dictating the procedure. Tedious details require weeks and finally an idea is borm-an idea that will catch the fancy of the next carnival crowd-one that will surpass the ideas of the other years and will remain forever indelibly stamped in the memory of the revelers.

Balls are conducted with ex-stamped in the memory of the revelers.

Balls are conducted with extreme formality. Tickets cannot be obtained at any price but are complimentary gestures by the social orders. Greatly to be desired are the "call outs" in which unmasked society girls sit on the outer circle of the ballroom and await the calling of their names to dance with the masked revel-

Rex, king of the carnival, rides regally on his throne perched on the leading float and is surrounded by members of his court and the courtiers, who toss trinkets to the surging crowds. The trinkets, the king's largess to his subjects, cause a mad scramble by the crowds as they surge forward to capture the mementoes to be treasured as reminders of the carnival.

ers. The girls who are chosen are assured of social success, but many are disappointed.

One of the newest developments of entertainment at Mardi Gras is the children's parade which is staged on Saturday a week from Mardi Gras day. The school children of New Orleans prepare their own floats, select a king and queen, and parade the streets as their elders. The "shoebox" floats approach the beauty of those of the full-size parades.

Carnival gained its start al-

Carnival gained its start almost as a religious festival, since the word generally means a "farewell to flesh" or one final "fling" before Lent. So after the fanfare of Mardi Gras is over, New Orleans settles down to the penitential solemnity of Lent.

Although Mardi Gras will be one hundred and eleven years old in New Orleans with this year's ceremonies, its actual age cannot be computed. It reaches beyond the age of Buddha and the ancient Chinese festivals of Cheng and Ch'en. Its origin has been traced to the early spring festivals of the pagans 5,000 years ago, when mankind was struggling to master a language. Unfettered joy, the soul of Mardi Gras, was the universal language which the pagan found. So it lives today in the rich mirth and melody of the Louisiana carnival.

In 1827, only 109 years after the birth of New Orleans, Mardi Gras was brought to the New World by a group of students who had been attending school in Paris. Garbed in motley costumes and masked in grotesque fashion they roamed

During the past 100 years' nobility, incognito behind the mask

Mardi Gras theme song was inspired by a foreign noble, Grand Duke Alexis of Russia, brother of the czar, who joined the New Orleans revelers in 1872.

After the introduction of Mardi

After the introduction of Mardi Gras by the ribald students of 1827, the French Quarter took up the celebration. For years the street carnival paraded in rags and tatters, but emerged in 1837 after months of preparation a thing of beauty. That was New Orleans' first real Mardi Gras.

It was not until 1857, however, that the secret social orders began to spring up. The first was the "Mistick Krewe of Comus." which today is the oldest and most exclusive of the carnival groups. Comus was organized by a group of young business men and derived its name from the god of festive joy and mirth. John Milton, the English poet, had written about Comus, and consequently the floats of the 'krewe' that year depicted scenes from the poet's "Paradise Lost."

In 1870 the second carnival social group was formed. The "Twelfth Night Revelers" joined Comus, giving their ball on January 6. Since that day the Twelfth Night order has opened the Mardi Gras season with a ball on the twelfth night after Christmas.

The "Krewe of Rex," the royal and reigning order of the carnival, was born in 1872, and until this day the organization names the king and queen of Mardi Gras; rulers supreme for the one day. The Rex parade is staged in daylight in order that it will not conflict with the sensational night parade of Comus.

Rex was given Mardi Gras

Rex was given Mardi Gras night for its ball, and Comus still holds its masque on the same night. At the stroke of midnight, as Ash Wednesday ushers in Lent, the king and queen and court of Rex join the king augen and court the king and queen and court of Rex join the king, queen and court of Comus. The glittering array of princely costumes is one of the most colorful spectacles in all Mardi Gras. As legend goes, Rex was the Lord of Misrule, son of Old King Cole and Terpsichore, the Greek goddess of the dance. So the fun-loving New Orleans socialites adopted the mythological figure as a sponsor.

After the carnival of 1872, the state of Louisiana enacted a law setting aside Mardi Gras as a state-wide holiday. However, observance of the festival virtually was a necessity before the law. Business houses were unable to keep their doors open for the crowds of merrymakers, so the logical thing to do was to join them. And that's what they did—right glad!!

A famous American journalist, wrote of it thus: "Mardi Gras really means something; probably not as much as the enthusiastic local resident insists, but still something. It is no inconsiderable achievement to bring together large numbers of persons, working to create something which is evanescent and beautiful, and can only be enjoyed by forgetting, for the moment at least, all the lessons of the Puritans . . . On the whole, an innocent, gay and desirable revel."

KNOW TOPSOIL FOR EROSION CONTROL

Farmer Should Be Familiar

State College—WNU Service.

It's hard for a farmer to adopt the kind of erosion control practices that would be most effective on his land unless he knows what type of soil covers his fields.

soil covers his fields.

He needs to consider the thickness and texture of the topsoil and also the subsoil underneath. He needs to consider the slope of the land over each field, how badly the soil tends to erode and how much soil has been washed away already.

has been washed away already. In some sections so much topsoil has been washed away that the farmers on it have to eke out a living as best they can by virtually tilling the subsoil.

There are soils being cultivated that are better suited to making brick than to producing crops.

Within a single field there may be big differences in the type of soil found in various places. Or differences in the slope over a field cause it to be badly eroded in some places while in others there is still a fairly good layer of topsoil.

while in others there is still a fairly good layer of topsoil.

The badly eroded places should be retired to thick-growing cover crops, but the more level places may still be good for careful farming.

A striking example of differences in soil may be gained by examining the thin topsoil on a place where row crops have been grown for a long time, then compare it with the thick, spongy soil in a wooded area nearby.

A careful study of the soil on each farm has proved one of the most important steps in the "whole-farm" method of controlling erosion now being demonstrated in erosion control areas.

Buff Turkey Not Among Recognized Varieties

Recognized Varieties
Whether or not the Buff turkey has become extinct, it has evidently lost its place in official recognition as a variety. The present standard recognizes six varieties, among which the Buff does not appear. A Department of Agriculture publication of something over 30 years ago, while recognizing the Buff as a variety, says of it that it is not generally known throughout the country and,
in many localities, is almost unknown.

in many localities, is almost unknown.

The standard calls for a pure buff color throughout, says this publication, but this shade of coloring is seldom seen. "As bred for market, these turkeys are of a reddish buff or light chestnut color, mixed with white and some dark shadings." It would seem very likely that this variety has become merged with the Bourbon Red of similar colorings and its identity lost. It may be that some may still be able to offer pure golden yellow turkeys of the old Buff variety but the chances are, says a writer in the Rural New-Yorker, that the offering would be what has been found before, Buff Bourbon Reds. Here would appear an opportunity to back-track to an old and lost variety and make it of such distinction as to call for favorable recognition.

To Tell Age of Sheep

To Tell Age of Sheep

The age of a sheep can be determined by looking at the teeth, says the Indiana Farmer's Guide. There are eight front teeth in the lower jaw and none in the upper jaw. Lamb teeth are small, white and narrow, and are replaced by larger, wider, permanent teeth at yearly intervals as follows: One year, two permanent teeth (center pair); two years, four permanent teeth; four years, full mouth of eight permanent teeth. After four years there is no definite method of telling the age by the teeth.

Poultry experts estimate a pullet eats 25 to 27 pounds of feed before reaching maturity. Only those pullets that are well-grown, well-fleshed, well-pigmented, and free from disease are profit-able.

Horses and cows and sheep must rely on their lips to gather grass or grain, and they can take in only a lipful at a time.

Frank Merriwell at Fardale

SYNOPSIS

When Bart Hodge, a vain yeath of sixteen, alights from a train at Fardale, he stumbles over a hairbilled dog, and in a rage kicks the animal. "Um-m," said Walter, lifting his eyebrows slightly. "Maybe I was misinformed. I was told they had brought salt to rub into your wounds. I fully expected to find you smarting severely, but you don't look very miserable."

"Oh, quite the contrary, sir."

"Well, I see you've taken the usual frosh lesson in manners, but you don't have to 'sir' me. The sophs like it, but just between ourselves we'll pass it over."

His eyes discovered the newspaper on the floor where Bob Gagg had dropped it, and he picked it up. "Your paper?" he asked, looking at Frank again.

"I think it belongs to one of the visitors. A high-browed young gentleman was reading aloud from it when Mulloy and I came in. This is Barney Mulloy, Mr. Burrage. A pal."

Burrage gave Barney a cordial handshake also before he spoke to Merry again: "I guess the highbrow you mention was reading the dirt I came here to see you about, Merriwell. I've read it myself and it's pretty crummy, I've just come back from the village after talking to my sister about it. She's ready to put on her war paint and go out after scalps."

Hodge had sought retirement in the backwound. The appearance of on her war paint and go out after scalps."

Hodge had sought retirement in the hackground. The appearance of Inza's brother had filled him with apprehension. Already the set-up which he had rigged with Bascomb's aid had been knocked into a cocked hat, and now the climax threatened to ditch him in a grand crash.

"Inza asked me to see you as soon as I got back here, Merriwell," Burrage went on. "She suggested writing a letter to the paper herself and telling the truth about what happened."

That was something Frank hadn't expected and it brought a flush into his face. "Now that was kind of her, Mr. Burrage," he said, "but I don't think it'll be necessary. The Pasteur report will settle whether the dog was mad or not."

"But what she's sizzling over is the estate whether the the dog was mad or not."

"But what she's sizzling over is the statement made by Hodge. She says he ran away and left her to the mercy of the dog, and she's sure the beast would have pounced on her when she twisted her ankle and fell down. She thinks it was marvelous, the way you faced the furious creature and fought him off until John Snodd arrived and shot him."

Now Bart was forced to step forward and defend himself. His face was white and his voice husky and unsteady.

was write and his votice hissy and unsteady.
"I don't know whether the dog was mad or not," he said. "I never said I did. But I didn't run away. What I did was get the other girls out of there as quick as I could. I thought Merriwell and Mulloy ought to be able to take care of Miss Burrage."

Burrage gave him a crushing Burrage gave him a crushing look. "I've taken the trouble to talk to those other girls also," he stated. "They say you didn't stop for anything when you saw the dog coming. They say you hit the high spots and were rods ahead of them when they got out of the grove."

"They—they lie!" Hodge choked for a moment. "I—I—the minute I saw they were all safe I went back."
"After it was all over. After you saw they were all safe I went back."

"After it was all over. After you heard Snodd's gun and figured he'd shot the dog. That was really heroic. I won't tell you what my sister thinks of you, Hodge. I'll spare your feelings that much."

Bart tried to speak again, but the words wouldn't come. Everything had turned topsy-turvy. It was a bitter pill to swallow.
"Now you've pulled another boner by getting this gang in here to fry Merriwell," Burrage added.
"Well, Merriwell's a bum sport if he can't take a joke," put in Hugh Bascomb.

raiding a hen-coop, the fellows who had come there to take Merriwell over the jumps were edging toward the door.

"Oh, well," said Walter, smilling. "we'll pass that over as unfinished business."

"But you can bet it will be finished," growled Bascomb.

Burrage turned on him sharply, the smile gone from his face. "Look here, Bascombl" he said. "You have a way of getting rough when you catch a Tartar. Fun is fun, all right, but the kind of stuff you pull sometimes isn't funny. You better watch your step. Now put on your roller skates and take your little playmates with you."

Scowling sullenly, the big fellow led the retreat, and Hodge slipped out also. The day was spoiled for him.

"It begins to look as if you can take care of yourself, Merriwell," said Burrage, when the door had

"It begins to look as if you can take care of yourself, Merriwell," said Burrage, when the door had closed behind the departing guests, "but I'm going to warn you to keep your eyes skinned for Bascomb. Hodge isn't half so dangerous as that big gorilla, and somehow you've made him love you like poison."
"Why, he never did a thing but look at Bascomb's mouth and throw a fit over his first view of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado," said Mulloy quickly.

Walter Burrage caught his breath and gave a shout of laughter. "Oh, so that was it! The Grand Canyon! It fits! But if that name sticks, Merriwell, he'll hate you to his dying day."

Walter Burrage did what he could to put Frank and Barney in right at the school. He took them around and introduced them to several fellows who, like himself, had got somewhere. "Friends of mine," was what he called them, and it was enough. It carried weight. It impressed even Dean Graves, with whom he finally left them, in the dean's office.

Henry Graves was a calm, friendly man who had a way with boys. He could make them feel very comfortable in his presence, or very uncomfortable, if there was a good reason for it. Sympathy and understanding were his chief qualities. He always seemed to know when to be lenient with a fellow who had slipped a cog, and when to crack down. Youthful human nature was his study, and he pursued it daily. He gave Frank and Barney the biggest part of an hour. This, he told them, was their day to get themselves settled into place. Tomorrow the routine of the school would begin for them. And what he had to say about that routine prepared them well for it. They knew how to fall into line when they left him.

Fellows on their way to and from classes gave them hardly a glance as they roamed about the campus and among the buildings, eagerly taking everything in. The freshmen were easy to spot. The mere consciousness of being freshmen made them appear unbaked, no matter how much they tried to hide it.

"And, of course, we look just as green as they do, Barney," said Frank, smiling.

"Maybe we do," allowed Mulloy, but I've lamped two or three raw ones that would taste like spring grass to a hungry cow."

Whether Hodge was seeking to avoid them or not, they saw no more of him until class hours were over. Then, as they were lingering near the big gymnasium to see the football squad come out for practice, they got a surprise. Bart

"Do you see what I see, Frank-ie?" gasped Barney bie?" gasped Barney, his eyes hreatening to explode like soap bubbles. "Why, I'm batty," said Merry, "if

"Now you've pulled another boner by getting this gang in here to fry Merriwell." Burrage added.
"Well, Merriwell's a bum sport if the can't take a joke," put in Hugh Bascomb.
"That's right," agreed Frank cheerfully, "but I didn't stick out my chin for it."
"He took it," grinned Mulloy, "and handed it right back again. And how!"
"He took it," grinned Mulloy, "and handed it right back again. And how!"
"Till confess I was a trifle surprised when I came in," said Burrage. "The wrong persons seemed to be shell shocked. How come?"
Nobody answered. Looking about as proud as if they had been caught Merriwell scooped it up, gave it a deft, quick turn in his hands, dropped it and kicked. The thing sailed as if shot from a cannon. Over the heads of the squad members, far over the head of the one who had given it the first boot, it zoomed.

bers, far over the head of the one who had given it the first boot, it zoomed.

They had looked round to see who would recover the ball. They saw Frank return it.

"Yéa-a!" shouted an astonished fellow. "Where'd that guy get Charlie Brickley's leg?"

Merriwell took hold of Mulloy's arm and turned him around. "Now that we've seen what we've beheld," he said, "let's totter back to our roost in Union hall."

An odd look had come into the Irish boy's face. "You've been holding out on me, Frankie," he charged. "Why didn't you tell me you played football?"

"I'd on't."

"Come now, laddy, you gave yourself away. Didn't I see you collect that ball when it was dodging like a rabbit chased by a hound dog? Didn't I watch you drop-kick it like one of the old masters? Didn't it go for a ride that was something to pant about? It was the work of an educated leg, whether you stole the leg from Charlie Brickley or not. Now come clean, old scout."

"Well," said Merriwell seriously, "I don't play the game any more, Barney. I'm all washed up."

"And what's the cause of that, I ask you?"

Frank took a little time to reply as they walked on. "Let's not go into it," he evaded. "I'e's a thing of the dear, dead past that's beyond recall, if you don't mind a slight touch of poetry. I suppose we all have our bitter secrets."

Mulloy was surprised and puzzled. "Oh, well," said he presently, "far be it from me to embarrass you, pal. But there'll be others. If it's on the level that you've quit, you made a break when you showed your stuff back there. I'll lay you odds you get a call for the squad."

"That'll be just too bad," said Frank, "for I'll have to duck it."

well's habitually frank and cheerful face.

Getting back to their room again, they found that their trunks had been delivered and moved in while they were away. They unpacked at once and stowed their belongings as well as they could into closets and drawers where space had not already been seized by Hodge. Later, a porter took the trunks away for storage.

The dining hall at the academy was still called the mess hall, as it had been in former days. It was a sight for Frank and Barney at meal time, when its huge seating capacity was filled to the limit with hungry fellows whose talk and laughter was a pleasant sound for youthful ears. They found their places at one of a number of long tables assigned to the freshmen.

They looked around for Hodge in cars. They found their places at one of a number of long tables assigned to the freshmen.

They looked around for Hodge in vain. He was not at any of the freshman tables. But that was cleared up presently when the chatter of some fellows who were talking football revealed that meals were served to members of the squad in a smaller room reserved for the athletic teams.

"Well," said Barney, speaking to Frank from the side of his mouth, "that gives us the pleasure of seeing less of him. It'll improve me appetite, too."

The half hour given to the evening meal passed swiftly and pleasantly. The food was sufficient and satisfying. They struck up acquaintances with a dozen sociable classmates in their vicinity. Everything was free and easy and everybody seemed happy. This was the life.

"I'm pinching myself to make sure it's no dream," said Mulloy as they walked back to Union hall.

Tad Jones was waiting for them on the steps. His grin, as he hailed them, seemed to have a meaning all its own.

"Somebody sent me for you, Frank," he said. "Bet you can't guess who. Just bet you can't."

"It's Miss Burrage, that's who. She's over to Mr. Snodd's 'nd she wants you to come there right away."

Barney's elbow jabbed in to Frank's ribs. "The call of the wild," he chuckled. "If you answer it, you're lost."

"But I'm too weak to resist," laughed Frank.

A clear sunset had left a silvery afterglow in the sky. The bright day was lingering like a departing guest at the door.

Inza was sitting in a little roadster and talking to her brother, standing beside the car, when Frank turned into Snodd's yard with Tad trotting at his side. She was laughing at something Walter was telling her. Barney had called her "a pip." It fell short; she was the roof.

"Hi, Miss Burrage!" cried Tad.
"Hi, there! I got him. I fetched him. I made him come."

"But it took quite a while," she said as they came up. "Did you have to pull a gun on him?"

Her laughter had faded down to an odd smile.
"But I had to wait," Tad hurried to explain. "He was takin' exercise with a linit of other."

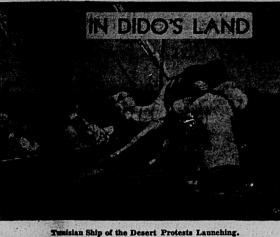

"But I had to wait, to explain. "He was takin' exercise with a knife 'nd fork."
"With a knife and—" The laugter leaped back to her lips and cascaded.
"Oh yea" said Merry, "when it

"Oh, yes," said Merry, "when it comes to athletics, I'm strong for that course."

Walter was laughing with them. "From what I heard at mess time," he said, "you may be pretty good in other courses. They say you can boot a football like nobody's business, Merriwell. The most of our kickers do it with their mouths."

Carthage Today Is Not the City of Which Virgil and Flaubert Wrote

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service. Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

ODAY, one goes to Carthage by automobile or electric train. Shades of Dido, Hannibal, and Hamilcar!

electric train. Shades of Dido, Hannibal, and Hamilcar! But for Virgil and Gustave Flaubert, Carthage would be deader than ancient Philadelphia, which now is Amman, Trans-Jordan:

Just above the station, in a little garden massed with daisies and geraniums, is a monument to Flaubert. The head, representing the "immortal author of Salammbo" (his "Madame Bovary" isn't even mentioned in Carthage) is less than life size. But Flaubert's romantic description clothes the city site with an aura of lasting glory.

Today, it seems a blessing that the author wrote some 75 years ago, for Carthage is less Carthage now. Stucco villas are crowding closer and closer about the ancient ports and their gardens climb higher and higher on the Brysa, where the Carthaginians had their fort and temple and around which 700,000 of them had their homes.

The site which Dido chose is too blessed by beauty and climate to remain a mere sepulcher for a vanished race which left its most notable monuments on the maps of primitive seamanship and ancient world commerce.

Carthage isn't Carthage, and pos-primitive seamanship and ancient world commerce.

Carthage isn't Carthage, and possibly never was. What remains is Funic, Roman, Christian, Moslem, and art moderne. Here heavy-footed elephants shuffled down long ramps to their stables and armed men stood watch on walls that seemed impregnable. But the site is a grab bag of history, and unless one is careful he stumbles over anachronisms.
"Salammbo" Is a Suburb.
The guardian spirit of Carthage

The guardian spirit of Carthage is a novelist's creation, whose name has been appropriated by a seaside suburb. As one rides from La Goulette (the "gullet" of the lake of Tunis) toward Carthage, the street-car conductor shouts "Siammbo." Strangers start at the magic word. The only Punic relic worthy of Flaubert's heroine is a young priestess with a dove in her hand and her soft robe ending in wings which cross over her limbs. Among the stone ammunition, crude steles, and cinerary caskets of the Punic period, this life-size coffin top stands out like a pretty girl in a morgue. Revengeful ancients who vowed not to leave one stone of Carthage on another kept their promise, but this lone figure slept on in her hill-side tomb and so survived to prove that the Punic traders, who took their art where they found it, were not entirely lacking in taste.

The ancient ports of Carthage, long isolated from the sea by the building of a shore road, are again connected with the guil of Tunis. In the interests of health, small channels have been dug. The naval and commercial harbors are now connected with the Mediterranean whose Levantine shores bathe the piles of murex shells from which Tyre and Sidon extracted a purple whose memory still colors history. From the rough stones of the amphitheater rises a white cross.

"Why this modern emblem in this pagan arena?" one wonders. Then he remembers. Cardinal Lavigerie, who never lost his historic sense amid his numerous good works, erected this seemingly incongruous cross over a spot where Christian martyrs, to whom that symbol was more than life, were put to death some 400 years before Mohammed was born.

"Carthage must be destroyed" was the grandiose slogan. But Caesar and Augustus had more sense than Sciplo. They deliberately restored a ruined enemy to more than its former beauty and Hadrian gave it an aqueduct whose remains still rank among Tunisia's most impressive ancient monuments.

Kairouan the Saintly.

For miles his high-arched aqueduct stretches above grainfields and grazing flocks, coming from Mount Zahouan, which provides Tunis, as it did Carthage, with water. You parallel it on your way to Kairouan parallel it on your way to Kairouan the Saintly.

How describe this holy place created by Moslems, some of whom had seen the Prophet in the flesh? Nothing you may read prepares you for the silence of the Great Mosque, the polychrome tiles of the mosque of Sidi Sahab, the grotesque swords and giant pipe of the mosque of Sabers, the teeming marketplace of the Rue Saussier, or the relentless irritation of street Arabs begging, "Good day, mister, give me a cigarette."

arette."
Once a year the word evidently goes around that the little pests shall cease to pester. And since that luxury comes at a time when Kairouan is at its best, a visit on the last day of the annual Rug fair is pleasantly memorable.

Soon after dawn, to receive powder for their salutes, the famous Zlass horsemen assemble beside the circular pool of the Aghlabites. Clad in their best robes and wearing sombreros whose broad brims are held up by ostrich feathers, they seem a docile lot. But when the resident general's car arrives the tempo quickens.

resident general's car arrives the tempo quickens.

By afternoon these somnolent horses will be racing at breakneck speed while their riders stand in their saddles, sweep the earth with their heads, do a shoulder stand on a galloping charger, and juggle gun and saber in mimic warfare.

Among the whitewashed graves where the dead huddle as close as possible to the Great Mosque, veiled women stand and cheer.

Eve has not lost her delight in weddings. When the rider sweeps down on a cortege grouped about the silken saddle-tent of the bride-to-be, and an Arab Lochinvar abducts the angel of his dreams from half-hearted defenders, who are probably glad to have it over with, the veiled women ululate their delight. The fact that the silken can opy is empty doesn't spoil the fun.

Too Much Olive Oil Produced.
Between Kairouan and the southern oases stretches the eastern plain, in which the French protectors take just pride, for they have restored fertility to a region long barren. In neat rows, miles long and 80 feet apart, stand olive trees whose only fault is their fruitfulness.

parren. In neat rows, miles long and 80 feet apart, stand olive trees whose only fault is their fruitfulness.

When Paul Bourde, a journalist, convinced of ancient olive production here by the ruins of Roman millstones, brought back groves to regions the Arab invader had laid desolate, he failed to bring back the little Roman lamp.

Even beauty parlors can't use as much olive oil as did the Roman athletes who rubbed it on thick and then scraped it off in rivulets with the curved strigil. Lands of corn and cotton offer substitutes, and the Philippine palm seeks its share of the oil trade. Bourde succeeded all too well. Tunisian olive oil, the equal of any, begs for buyers at a fourth its former price.

Sousse and Sfax are the "big cities" of Tunisia's eastern plain. Each has its neat European quarters, each its interesting native town.

Sousse, then Hadrumetum, helped Hannibal fight Scipio and later was carpeted with Roman mosaics. Le Bardo's little gem, found at Sousse, shows Virgil writing the "Aeneid" between the Muses.

Sfax, second only to Tunis, ships phosphates and fishes for sponges, octopuses, and a variety of finny fodder. Its neat European quarter seems like an exposition city. Native life centers in the mosque. On raised benches covered with matting, dealers sell frippery gewgaws and a fortune-teller divines from field beans.

Amphitheater of El Djem.

Between Sousse and Sfax a Roman ruin dwarfs the modern town for which it was the quarry. It is the amphitheater of El Djem. One sees it from miles away and its memory follows one for years.

In the Eighth century, when Kahena, Berber queen, sought to repel the Arab invaders, this coliseum served as her fortress. Except for this and a few other martial interludes the towering structure stood there, empty as the Yale bowl or the Ann Arbor stadium between games, waiting only for 60,000 spectators to swarm toward the clouds and look down on the barbaric spectacles in the arena.

Then, at the end of the Seventeenth century, rebels hid here, a bey broke through the wall to reach them, and El Djem, each of whose stones had been painfully quarried and shaped, became a source of ready-made building blocks for puny huts.

Still towering like a noble patriarch above its ignoble offspring, this stately ruin dominates the plain.

At Gabes, where palm fronds mass between sea and sand, a little stream marks the sharp-cut boundary line between town and oasis.

All day, beside that stream and in it, native women with ornate jewel-ry about their ears pound laundry with paddles made from the spine of palm fronds, or wring the necks of writhing bedcovers colored like Joseph's coat.

One look at their bright robes, bordering a blue stream under waving palms, and a photographer rushes for his color camera.

But he has only to spread his tall tripod and hide his face in a focusing cloth to make the army of women retreat behind mud walls.

Can Spring Be Far Away?

WITH Winter almost over, March blizzards to the contrary notwithstanding, you find yourself eyeing the fashion sheets a little more than casually. Indeed you probably already have your needle threaded, just waiting for some nice Spring patterns to make your acquaintance. And here they are, three quick tricks, each pleasantly awaiting your choice, each designed to make some wardrobe happy. Which do you prefer?

Fitted Bodice.

Look your Sunday best in this graceful afternoon frock with its snug and softly shirred waistline. The skirt flares slightly to the front and emphasizes the slimness of the silhouette. Note the saddle shoulder and short, puffed sleeves—details that are unusually becoming and make for distinction. One of the new widely spaced flower patterns in rayon or silk will make your informal afternoons and evening a double delight, and the pattern is a particular joy to work with. So simple, and so pleasing.

The First Step

The First Step

The first step toward a successful garden is an early start.

Spade or plow as soon as possible. If a handful of soil gripped firmly can be crumbled readily upon release, the soil is in condition to be worked.

It is important that fertilizer be used cautiously, advises Harold Coulter, vegetable expert of the Ferry Seed Institute. An excess is often harmful, particularly in growing fruits, such as tomatoes, cucumbers and peppers.

Garden preparation effort is wasted if you do not plant seeds from dependable sources. Select your favorite varieties from the nearby store before the supply is depleted, even though it is not yet time to plant. Make sure the seeds you buy are freshly packed.

Weather conditions permitting, it is advisable to spade into the soil some rotted manure, rotted leaves or lawn clippings, or rotted garden refuse. Clay soils are improved in texture by this treatment, and sandy soils are improved in water holding capacity.

For Washington's Birthday.

FEBRUARY 22 would not be completely celebrated if cherries were not featured in some way during the day. It is true that the story of the cherry tree and George Washington is more closely connected in the memory of many of us than his great prowess as the Father of our Country. We seem to take for granted his ability as a leader and talk about the cherry tree episode of his youth.
