SCHOOL VO-AG CLASSES SEE BLASTING DEMONSTRATION

The combined Vo-Ag classes of the local high school visited the farm of Mr. John Vogl and sons last Monday morning for a demonstration of clearing tree stumps from fields by the use of dynamite. Ernest and Felix Vogl conducted the demonstration. They explained the proper methods of setting and handling dynamite; while George Vaupa, the agricultural instructor, pointed out various other applications of blasting material for farm use, such as draining ditches, breaking up hard pans, and blasting post holes. This work is part of the Farm Mechanics course being given at the school this year.

The local chapter of the Future Farmers of America is sponsoring a movie benefit for next Monday and Tuesday evenings at the Reese Theatre for the purpose of raising funds towards the annual camping trip to be held this summer. The picture to be shown is "52nd Street." It is a musical comedy of high entertainment value, depicting the rise of "Entertainment Row" in New York City. Tickets may be obtained from any Vo-Ag boy at any time before the show begins.

BERRY CROP IN DELAWARE SAID TO BE SHORT

Unfavorable weather conditions of the past ten days has somewhat overcome the advance made by various crops earlier in the spring, according to information assembled by the State Board of Agriculture.

Earlier in the spring, fine weather conditions caused various crops to advance about two weeks and it is now thought that some of this advance has been lost through both the cold weather and dry season experienced recently.

According to the reports reaching the Board of Agriculture the strawberry crop in Delaware this year will be exceptionally short. In some cases it is estimated that the shortage over last year will be more than fifty thousand crates.

Both the dry weather and a disease in the strawberry plants are claimed to be responsible for this condition. In some of the larger strawberry sections in Sussex county, the weevil ruined more than half of the plants.

Although the shipment of strawberries from Delaware started almost two weeks ago, the total shipments recorded up until Wednesday morning was 16,134 crates. Good prices are reported as being paid for the best quality of the strawberries.

A survey of the fruit orchards reveals that the crop of early apples will be excellent for size and quality, the quantity of the crop has not been estimated at this time. It is now expected that the early apples will be ready for the markets at the usual time.

STATE INFANT DEATH RATE SHOWS STEADY DECLINE

Delaware's annual infant death rate could be reduced by 31 per cent, through determined application of knowledge now available, according to Dr. Arthur C. Jost, Executive Secretary of the State Board of Health, writing in the spring number of the Delaware Health News. He points out that, through exercise of more care in the prevention of infection, infant deaths could be cut from the total of 254 in 1936, to a new low of not more than 175.

254, however, represents an almost 50 per cent cut in the death rate since 1921, during which year 501 infants died. In view of the large proportion of negro population in this state, this advance is considered noteworthy, but Dr. Jost feels that even further strides are possible.

"More care exercised in preventing infection should easily cut 10 from the number of those dying from the general diseases; should at least halve the number of those dying from the respiratory disorders; should by two-thirds the deaths of children from diseases of digestion and by a quarter those dying from diseases peculiar to infancy. We know the measures to be taken to bring about such a result. They are simple, easy and sure."

"The only question is—are we determined that they will be followed?" Dr. Jost's article was accompanied by comprehensive charts showing the comparative gains against various diseases.

The spring number of the Delaware Health News, "devoted to the lowering of the infant mortality rate by careful education of mothers and expectant mothers," drew most of its material from the forth-coming booklet on mother and baby care, which is being prepared by the State Board of Health for free distribution after June 1st. A grouping of baby faces, printed in soft blue, and occupying the entire cover, distinguished this from previous issues.

The Delaware Health News is a quarterly publication of the State Board of Health, and is distributed free of charge to social agencies, state officials and members of the legislature, physicians, dentists, and to any interested persons who may request their names put on the mailing list.

$14,062 Paid in Old Age Pensions

A total of $14,062.77 was paid Delaware residents or their estates in old-age lump sum claims under the social security act between January 1 and April 30, this year, Roger R. Minker, manager of the State office said Tuesday. The Social Security Board has approved 464 claims, filed by residents of the State or their estates under the act. During April there were 39 claims filed, amounting to $1,963.69, and averaged $50.35 cents each. All claims are allowed workers who have reached the age of 65 or to estates of those who have died. Lump settlements made under the act amount to 3 1/2 per cent of total wages up to $3,000 received in one year from any one employer.

Reese B. Harrington's car was demolished when it skidded on the wet road near Woodside one afternoon this week. Fortunately, Mr. Harrington escaped with minor lacerations from New York.

CHILDREN'S HOME SOCIETY TO MEET IN DOVER

The Annual Meeting of the Delaware Children's Home Society will be held at the Hotel Richardson in Dover, from 10:30 A. M. to 12:30 P. M. on Wednesday, May 25th. This meeting is open to all individuals who have made financial contributions to the work of the Society since all contributors are members. The Society is an agency rendering service to dependent and neglected children. At present, its services reach all parts of the state. The organization and its program of service has undergone fundamental changes in personnel, policies and program during the past year and a half under the leadership of James H. Bishop, Executive Secretary.

The Annual Meeting will elect five members for the Board of Directors to serve three year terms. The Directors will present for action completely revised set of by-laws indicating the philosophy, objectives and methods of the Society in terms of present-day child welfare standards and procedures. Members of the staff will summarize briefly the major problems and achievements of the year.

A luncheon meeting will be held in the main dining room of the Hotel Richardson at 12:30 P. M. Any citizen interested in efforts to help meet the child welfare problems of the state is cordially invited.

The guest of honor and main speaker will be Mr. Edwin D. Solenberger, General Secretary, Children's Aid Society of Pennsylvania, and President of the Child Welfare League of America. He is recognized as an authority in the field of Public and Private Agencies dealing with the care of unfortunate children. He will speak on the relation of private agencies to developing state or public programs for Child Welfare. He will also indicate how he thinks the Delaware Children's Home Society can render the most vital service in relation to the total program of public welfare.

Mr. C. Rollin Zane, Executive Director of the State Board of Charities, will outline the Child Welfare Program of his Department with suggestions concerning the cooperation of State and Private Agencies to assure better correlation of efforts in the developing plans for better service to needy children.

Mr. James H. Bishop will present a challenge and conduct a question period in which those attending the luncheon will have further opportunity for discussion.

The Society has given more than forty years of continuous service to the State. Its office is in the Hutton Building, 304 South State Street, Dover. It has no institution but is rather an agency for placing and supervising neglected and dependent children in selected foster homes. It is now developing a staff and resources to render specialized services to meet needs that are not adequately provided for at the present time.

POULTRY MEETING

An invitation to the poultrymen of Delaware has been received by Frank B. Austin, president of the Delaware State Poultry Association, from John W. Snoddy, president of the Maryland State Poultry Council, to join in with the Maryland poultry raisers at their summer meeting and world's poultry congress which will be held July 27 and 28 at Ocean City, Md.

This announcement was made recently by H. L. Richardson, extension poultry specialist of the University of Delaware, and acting secretary for the Delaware State Poultry Association and is being released to the newspapers of the state through the office of Kent County Agent Russell E. Wilson, who is state director of publicity in connection with this seventh world's poultry congress and exposition to be held in Cleveland, Ohio, next summer during the period from July 28 to August 7.

The purpose of this summer meeting at Ocean City, Maryland, will be to stimulate interest in the world's poultry congress, and the details of the program will be announced later as the plans are completed. Poultrymen in each state of the union are being given the opportunity to purchase memberships in this congress, and each state has been assigned a quota based upon the amount of poultry produced by the state as compared to the United States as a whole.

Several committees have been appointed in Delaware in connection with the promotion of the various phases of the plans for the participation of this state in the world's poultry exposition. This congress will be made up of our entire forty-eight states and approximately seventy foreign countries and promises to be the greatest agricultural event ever to be staged in the United States. The financing of this exposition will be entirely by voluntary contributions from poultrymen and other persons who are interested in or connected with the poultry industry.

The ticket selling campaign in Delaware was launched recently when Ernest Smith, president of the Delaware World's Poultry Congress Association, and Woodrow Haas, chairman of the membership committee, presented the first ticket to Governor Richard C. McMillen.

Some of the objectives of this poultry congress are to stimulate interest in world poultry affairs, to promote friendly international relations by bringing together those interested in the various phases of this important industry, and to encourage the development of scientific research work and education in regard to the production and marketing of poultry products.

FREDERICA

The death of Benjamin Franklin Burton, Sr., at his home on David street, Frederica, Thursday morning at three o'clock was a great shock to his family and community. Mr. Burton, aged 64, who had been a general merchant in Frederica for fifty years, remarked to his friends on Wednesday evening that he had never felt better.

After closing his store at ten P. M. he went to his home where he suffered an attack of acute indigestion at 1:30 and died from a heart attack at 3 o'clock.

Born here August 12, 1874, the son of the late B. F. and Elizabeth Ann Burton. After graduating from the Frederica public school, Mr. Burton helped his father in a brick kiln and assisted in building of the large brick general store which his father operated.

After the death of his father he continued the business and devoted his life to catering to wishes of the town folk by handling a large line of dry goods and groceries. Farmers throughout the surrounding community sold eggs and grain to him and he traded these. He was the most industrious and outstanding merchant in the town; not only courteous and considerate, but generous in his contributions to organizations in the church and community. He had the highest ideals of strong manhood answering to each and every trust.

The Epworth League will meet in the church on Sunday evening at 6:15 Miss Evelyn Purnell will be in charge. Subject: "You do not have to sacrifice high ideals to become popular."

Fun for the Whole Family

Today's Washington

Washington Monument Framed in a Capitol Arch.

Tourists to Our National Capital Find Many New Structures Have Risen

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.
"IT LOOKS just like the postcards!" typical sightseer's comment on the Washington scene, is still true. The Capitol dome is still the same as in the newsreel backdrop for senatorial snapshots. The Washington monument at night is still a looming landmark in peaked white hood with red airplane beacons for eyes.

But behind the scenes and indoors are many changes which prevent last year's two and three-fourths million visitors to the District of Columbia from feeling they have seen everything.

The triangular block east of the Archives building, where motorists have been staring at blank wooden enclosing walls while waiting for traffic signals at Constitution and Pennsylvania avenues, has at last been unveiled to reveal the Apex building. This new home for the federal trade commission is named for its position at the apex of the Federal Triangle group of glorified office buildings, already housing ten important bureaus and commissions. The new seven-floor Apex structure has a "flatiron" floorplan, with its rounded column-lined tip pointed down Pennsylvania avenue toward the capitol, five blocks east.

As soon as the Apex building shed its screen of gray hoarding, up went a larger wooden barrier across the street and two steam shovels began to bite out the foundation for a National Art Gallery to house the Mellon collection. Art students may amuse themselves while waiting for its completion by visiting the recently opened Museum of Modern Art, fifth art museum of Washington. Beige and ivory backgrounds and furniture of blond woods lend an atmosphere of freshness to the District's affiliate to New York city's Modern Art museum. The new gallery, in the Metropolitan Club building at Seventeenth and H streets, presents changing exhibitions instead of a permanent display.

For Financiers and Admirals.
A recent addition to the stern facades of Constitution avenue is the Federal Reserve Bank Board building at Twenty-first street. A pair of splashing fountains in shallow black granite bowls flank the entrance to the spacious low building of polished white gray-veined Georgia marble. Over the front door broods a stone eagle four yards tall. Within, the two-story marble hall, with roof of molded glass, has a double stairway leading to the 12 doors tagged with the names of the 12 member banks.

Other new buildings on the district official scene are the additions to the National Zoological park—the Pachyderm house for giraffe, elephant, rhino, hippo, tapir, and buffalo tenants; and the air-conditioned Small Mammals house for monkeys, civet cats, otters, and such little creatures as squirrels, gophers, chipmunks, and kangaroo rats.

Strictly businesslike is the appearance of the 11-story remodeled quarters of the Home Owners Loan corporation, at First street and Indiana avenue, with tidy limestone front covering almost 200,000 square feet of office space. Nearby rises the new District Court building with its eight streamlined courtrooms, situated just south of Judiciary square.

Among unusual new structures in Washington are several which will take their places in the official directory under the obscure title of annexes. The Agricultural annex, also known as the Standardization building of the bureau of agricultural economics ("Cotton building" for short) is a long six-story rectangle of tapestry brick at Twelfth and C streets Southwest. Here, cotton, wool, hay, seeds, beans, and other agricultural products are tested and classified for sale. Continuous window strips four stories high and special skylights, scientifically designed to throw shadowless light into laboratories used for classing cotton fiber according to color and size, are outward signs of the scientific research within.

Huge Engraving Annex.
The bureau of engraving's new seven-story annex across the street is believed to be the largest factory-type structure in the world built of steel and concrete. Polished veneer lining the molds in which the concrete was poured gave the surface a smooth finish resembling stone. The same continuous window strip straight up several stories is a feature of the construction, putting 17 glittering vertical stripes up the Fourteenth street side of the building. The annex's five massive wings are visible from the south. Skylights with northern exposure are provided for top floor studios of artists and engravers who design stamps, currency, and bonds; as far as possible, daylight will be substituted for the blazing blue electric lights so long a feature of the old Engraving building across the street. All stamps will be manufactured in the new annex, as well as designs for other valuable paper, 19 vaults for storage and three non-pilferable incinerators, for completely destroying discarded valuables, are built-in features of the equipment. A tunnel connects the annex with a government loading platform in the railroad yards nearby, for safer shipment of valuables and quicker unloading of paper, dyes, and chemicals.

The capital's third new annex of the year is the addition to the library of congress, east of the parent building and glaringly white beside its age-grimed older. This annex provides storage space for ten million books, as well as numerous periodicals, with a penthouse for 167 quiet private study rooms.

Nearby in the capitol, the year has brought changes in the bronze population of Statuary hall—three newcomers, Nebraska has installed its first representatives in this American Hall of Fame, William Jennings Bryan and J. Sterling Morton. General William Henry Harrison Beadle, educator, was sent to Statuary hall for South Dakota. In the gaunt somber crypt of the capitol basement has been installed a pearly white plaster model of the building, made in an accurate scale of one-fifth inch to the foot, complete even in details of balustrades or Corinthian capitals of columns. A detachable section shows how the East front would look if extended as the architect planned.

Capitol Now Air-Conditioned.
Most striking development in the capitol, from the tourists' point of view, is the newly installed air-conditioning plant which has the cooling capacity of a seven-story block of ice melting in 24 hours, or of 200,000 average household refrigerators. The air-conditioning operates from the capitol power plant, and furnishes cool air also for the senate offices and the two house of office buildings through a giant system of copper pipes.

Outstanding indoor developments in the District of Columbia have taken place in the new south building of the Department of the Interior. The Office of Education library has been installed, with its museum collection of early American textbooks as well as modern education material. Near the building's south entrance is the new museum dramatizing the work of the nine bureaus and departments of the Interior with maps, charts, models, photographs, and 11 dioramas showing tiny figures in well built and lighted scenery.

Sculptures and Murals.
More interior decorating within the past year has peopled the Benjamin Franklin Post Office building with sculptured figures showing a dozen kinds of postmen; on snowshoes, on a stage coach, in a mail plane, traveling by Pony Express, etc. Murals in the same building depict mail service during covered wagon days, in the Revolution, in the tropics and in the Arctic, and in danger from Indian and bandit attacks.

Murals and fresco painting directly on plaster have also been added to the decorations of the Department of Justice. The series shows symbols of justice in its relation to mob violence, prisons, children and law. Murals of monumental size have been installed in the Archives building.

Park developments include a commemorative tree-planting along the George Washington Memorial parkway, honoring the 13 states that signed the Constitution, with sycamore, pecan, hemlock, and other typical trees.

Beauty Standards Alter With Years, Says Betty Wells

By BETTY WELLS
 EACH generation, and almost every individual, feels pretty superior on the subject of taste. In short, what we like is good taste—while bad taste is the prerogative of the other person. Isn't bad taste always something associated with somebody else rather than ourselves? But what about the person we accuse? Perhaps, in fact very probably, he thinks the same thing about us. And rarely, indeed if ever, does one generation fail to scorn the taste of the preceding generation.

Broadly, taste reflects standards of beauty. Yet we constantly hear authoritative artists and decorators say that there have been throughout art history certain recognized standards of beauty that can be accepted as beauty. We are convinced that there are no hard and fast standards, no set definitions. That beauty is a spiritual quality, like love. That it is individual and ephemeral, like happiness. That we can't measure it or make rules about it.

So we try not to be glib about our taste. And so positive about what is beautiful and what is ugly. Because time and tastes change, and we don't see why we must consider our taste superior to that of the gay nineties, just because it is different. If we like it, that's enough.

ADVENTURES OF PETER RABBIT

By THORNTON W. BURGESS
 SURELY no one was ever in a tighter place than was Peter Rabbit when Reddy Fox chased him under the brush pile in the Green Forest and then Old Man Coyote and Granny Fox and Reddy Fox and Redtail the Hawk watched all the rest of the long day for him to come out. He couldn't stay there forever because, you know, there was nothing to eat and Peter, like most folks, just has to eat. But Peter has a great deal of wisdom in his funny little head, even if he does sometimes do very foolish things, and one of the wisest things that Peter does is never to give up hope.

"I wonder where this goes to," thought Peter. "I believe I'll find out."

So when Peter crawled under that pile of brush and so escaped Reddy Fox his first thought was one of thankfulness. He didn't know how he was ever going to get back to the dear Old Briar Patch, but he was safe so long as he stayed where he was, and he was very thankful for that.

After he had rested and quite got his breath Peter began to look around to see just what kind of a place the old brush pile was. He saw right away that just so long as he stayed there he was perfectly safe, for the brush was so thick that Reddy Fox could never crawl under. "It's a regular castle," thought Peter.

Now Peter didn't know much about castles. If he had he would have expected to find somewhere a secret passage. All castles, you know, have secret passages. Anyway, they are supposed to. But Peter didn't know this, and so when he came to an old stump right in the middle of the brush pile and between the roots of it found a hole he was surprised. But he was just as much pleased as he was surprised. He pulled out some of the leaves and sticks that filled the doorway and went in. There was a long hall which was very dark, and Peter knew by the smell that it had not been used by anyone for a very long time.

"It's an old house made by one of Johnny Chuck's relatives," thought Peter. "I wonder if there is a good bedroom where I can take a nap."

He kept on down the long hall, and sure enough presently came to a snug bedroom. He was just about to make himself comfortable for a nap when he noticed another hall.

"I wonder where this goes to," thought Peter. "I believe I'll find out."

So very carefully Peter crept along the other hall. It was very much longer than the first one. By and by he saw a little daylight ahead and knew that he was nearly to a doorway. Like the first doorway, this one was partly closed with dead leaves and sticks. Peter peeped out between them. Then his heart gave a great jump. That doorway wasn't under the old brush pile at all. It was almost under the very tree in which sat Redtail the Hawk keeping watch, and it was nearly hidden by a little hemlock tree growing close by. Peter chuckled a little. "I wonder if there is one should hear. Then he stretched himself out to watch and wait. When the black shadows began to creep through the Green Forest Redtail flew away to get Hooty the Owl to take his place, for you know Redtail cannot see at night. Then very, very carefully, Peter pulled aside the leaves and sticks and tiptoed out, taking care not to make the tiniest, weeniest sound. As soon as he dared he began to run, lipperty-lip, and soon was well on his way to the dear Old Briar Patch.

Strengthening the Fingers

HOW to SEW

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

STRIPES are popular for slip covers this season. Don't forget to center a striped pattern in the back and the seat of a chair. The crosswise use of stripes may also have possibilities as for the bottom of the chair shown here.

Generally the main pieces of a slip cover are fitted and cut right on the piece of furniture with a generous allowance for seams and a tuck in around spring seats. For small shaped sections, such as the fronts of some chair arms and parts of some wing chairs, paper patterns may be made to use in cutting the fabric.

Pin the paper to the part of which you wish to make a pattern, as shown here at A, then mark the outline on the paper feeling your way along the edge line with the side rather than the tip of the

When gathers are needed to shape the fabric over rounded parts, gather the edge and arrange the gathers with the cover piece pinned in place as shown at C.

Dresses for Street and Home Wear!

TWO dresses, as practical as they are pretty—one for shopping and general street wear, the other ideal for round the house, and made on slenderizing lines. Notice that they both use the smart front closing. Both these patterns are quick and easy to make up, and each is accompanied by a complete and detailed sew chart.

Frock With Girdled Waistline. Fashion says everything must have a certain amount of soft detailing this season, and this charming tailored dress obeys with draping at the neckline, the girdled waist, and bust fullness beneath smooth shoulders. Easy shoulders, make it a style for summer. Silk crepe, silk print (in that case, have a plain-colored girdle effect) shantung, linen and shantung are good fabric choices for this.

House Dress for Large Women.

It's a diagram dress, so that it may be made in just a few hours. The long, unbroken, unbelted line, the utter simplicity, the v-neck, make this dress extremely becoming to women in the 36 to 52 size range. Short, pleated sleeves give plenty of ease for reaching and stretching. Make this up in pretty cottons that will stand plenty of wear and washing—percale, gingham, seersucker, broadcloth.

The Patterns.
 1489 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 4½ yards of 39-inch material, plus ¾ yard of contrasting for girdle.
 1478 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. Size 38 requires 5 yards of 35-inch material.

Spring-Summer Pattern Book.

Send 15 cents for the Barbara Bell Spring and Summer Pattern Book which is now ready. It contains 109 attractive, practical and becoming designs. The Barbara Bell patterns are well planned, accurately cut and easy to follow. Each pattern includes a sew-chart which enables even a beginner to cut and make her own clothes.

True Courtesy Is Consideration in Action

Between merely formal courtesy and heart-inspired kindness, there is as much difference as between a wax model and a real woman.

Even formal civility, however, is invariably preferable to "brutal frankness."

The harder it is for a person to be decent in society, the more he should practice the social "niceties." The best place to practice kindness is in one's home. If one trains himself to be polite to his relatives, he need not fear that he will make any serious social blunders.—James Warnack in Los Angeles Times.

TWO-MINUTE BIOGRAPHIES

NEVILLE CHAMBERLAIN
 At sixty-nine, Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain of Great Britain has tackled one of the toughest governmental jobs in Europe. He comes fresh from six grueling years as chancellor of the exchequer, assuming the new task at a more advanced age than any man since Campbell-Bannerman. Yet he has taken over more work than any prime minister since Lloyd George, who was only fifty-three when he began heading the wartime group back in 1916.

 Nor is the prime ministership Mr. Chamberlain's only job. In 1924 Ramsay MacDonald took over both the premiership and the foreign office, thereby establishing a record. Chamberlain has taken the premiership plus about one-half the foreign secretary's duties. All this has been done at a time when the premiership alone has all but crushed two men, and foreign affairs have unseated three foreign ministers in three years.

 Mr. Chamberlain is also leader of his party in the house of commons, which means he must be at his "bench" every afternoon. Physically he is slight, but he possesses so much wiry vigor that he bears the task better than would some of his predecessors.

A famous sculptor, in a radio address the other evening, said: "The American home is a going institution." Yes—but going where?

At the close of a revival at Madisonville, Tenn., the evangelist called for all the bathing suits owned by the recent "converts"—and destroyed said bathing suits in a bonfire in front of the church—and a Baptist church, too!

This week is being observed as Air Mail Week—just why we do not know. It looks like a rather childish gesture to us. Some forty-two weeks are observed for some purpose, or no purpose, each year—and before the supply of weeks becomes exhausted, we hasten to suggest that, hereafter, the week of May 22 be observed as Lettuce Week.

STOVES

This is a queer subject for an editorial, you say. Probably so, but it is a queer editorial, and many editorials have been written on subjects less worthy.

We have wondered many years, why the stove, considering its influence on American life, has not come in for attention at the hands of our ablest writers. Considering it as a mere heating unit, they have overlooked its powerful potentialities.

The stove, be it the insignificant tin sheet affair or the more majestic

Harrington, has had a lot to do with shaping the destiny of Harrington and other towns. What Harrington is today, good or bad, progressive or backward, sanitary or unsanitary, morose or intelligent, may be, in no small degree, traced to our stoves. Stoves have brought people here to live—and they have driven many people away. The fact that we have no industries here to give our people employment may be attributed to the fact that we have too many stoves.

There comes a time in the life of the ordinary man, when he is long past his prime and has accumulated enough of this world's goods to see him through (by the practice of rigid economy) that he begins to look about for a pleasant place in which to spend his declining days. Does such a man move to the country? Does he look for the smallest village he can find? He does not. He looks for a town where he can find good stoves, with plenty of parking space. There, he knows, he can find kindred minds, people who, like himself, have finished the real activities of life and desire to coast the rest of the way.

There, day by day, he sits, cussing every proposed improvement, every progressive movement, his alleged reason being that "it will cost too much!" He never goes into the figures, or weighs the benefits against the costs. He raises his voice in protest before he knows what it is about. The very idea that he should spend a penny for anything has the same effect that water has on a dog with hydrophobia. He is not interested in the coming generation. He is not interested in the present generation. He is interested in himself, although in a childish way. The circle around the stove (somebody else's stove, somebody else's coal, somebody else's electric lights, somebody else's investment) is his forum, where he raises his dismal croak. By fighting every proposed improvement for the town, he has driven industries from the town and caused the loss of thousands of dollars yearly. He is, of course, either illiterate or selfish; his perspective is bounded by his township or "hundred"—yet he would pit his ignorance against the wisdom of the world. He has only one philosophy, or sophistry, only one aim in life, like the character in the "Hoosier Schoolmaster," "git while the gittin's good."

WE LIKE LEVI

Ten notices of Sheriff's Sales appear in a Dover newspaper this week, a REPUBLICAN newspaper—and they are given to that paper from the office of a sheriff elected by the DEMOCRATS—on a DEMOCRATIC ticket.

How many notices of sheriff's sales appear this week in the Harrington

Journal, the only paper in Delaware whose loyalty to the Democratic party has never been questioned? In approved Bostonese English, we give vent to our more or less pent-up emotions: "Not a doggoned one!"

We haven't printed a single sale bill for Sheriff Everett since he has been in office. And it isn't because it is inconvenient for him to send them here, because his deputy, Norris C. Adams, lives in Harrington and comes home every night.

We like Levi L. Everett, sheriff of Kent county; in fact, we're very fond of him. We like to drop into his office, and chew the rag a little now and then. Levi sits back, smiling, and lets us do the talking. He's a very congenial fellow—and is one of the best listeners we've ever dazed with too much conversation.

He's friendly, intelligent and has a pleasing personality. We wish Levi would be a Democrat.

You say he is a Democrat? We know that he was elected on the Democratic ticket, but many people, once elected, become victims of amnesia or some kindred affliction.

Since Mr. Everett has been in office, the Harrington Journal, without question a Democratic paper, has not printed a single bill for a sheriff's sale—has published only six or eight notices of sheriff's sales—and one of these was given to us because it was too late to get it published in any other paper in the county. A Republican paper usually has six or eight of Mr. Everett's sales notices running at the same time.

Somewhat mystified by this remarkable turn-around policy Levi has inaugurated, we sought the reason, and were informed by his office that THE LAW STATES THAT THESE NOTICES OF SALES MUST BE PRINTED IN PAPERS PUBLISHED IN THE TOWN OR SECTION WHERE THE PROPERTY TO BE SOLD IS LOCATED!

We do not know the proper interpretation of said law—but we're going to look it up—just for our own dissatisfaction.

Quite a bit of property at Felton has been sold by the sheriff. Since Felton has no newspaper, we supposed such notices should have been published in the Harrington Journal. We had thought, up to this time, that Felton was only six miles from Harrington—but it must be much farther. The advertisements always appear in the Dover papers. Six miles from seventeen miles must leave a smaller number of miles than six!

It's sales have been at Mastee's corner. We haven't been out in quite a while, but it had the relief that Mastee's Corner is only four miles from Harrington. Now we discover that it is up somewhere near Dover. Since the Mastee's Corner paper suspended in 1911, these notices appeared in the Dover papers.

As we said in the beginning, we're fond of Levi—but this habit of giving all the business to the opposition party, as practiced by his office and some other offices—is not going to help the Democratic party a bit in the coming election.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK—Two or three years ago, I was one of a group of newspaper men arguing about who was the best reporter who ever worked a round here.

The diligent reporter has been duly rewarded. He is the Sir Pomeroy Burton whose magnificent French chateau the duke and duchess of Windsor were looking over recently.

With the Northcliffe papers in London, he became a multi-millionaire, as he transformed British journalism with daring American techniques.

He was a printer's devil on his father's newspaper in Youngstown, Ohio, and, at the age of twelve, was knocking about country printshops in Ohio on the same job.

He became city editor and managing editor of the Eagle, held important executive positions with the World and the New York Journal and was taken to England by Lord Northcliffe in 1904.

In the World war, he virtually headed the organization of British propaganda, and many of the most damaging anti-German stories were attributed to him.

His friends insisted he had enlivened and regenerated it. He makes an occasional trip to America with a staff of valets and secretaries, suave, dainty and still fit and impressive at seventy-two, with more than a touch of British accent.

Over here, he always hated the name Pomeroy and shortened it to Roy, but picked it up again in England. He had been named for "Brick" Pomeroy, the cyclonic journalistic disturber of the latter half of the last century, and he held Mr. Pomeroy in low esteem.

From a Wisconsin crossroads, he rambled around the country in newspaper and financial brawls, and, in his old age, just through sheer animal spirits, started plunging a tunnel through the Rocky mountains, at Georgetown, Colo.

He was flattened by the '93 depression and died soon after, with nothing to show for his life's work but a hole in the ground. Then it was discovered that the tunnel had gouged into fabulous mineral wealth in Kelso mountain.

REPORTING the return of Poulney Bigelow from a visit to his friend, the former kaiser, and his fervent approval of dictators, has become a matter of annual routine.

Mr. Bigelow Has a Yen for Fuehrers It is an old story, but the freshness and vehemence of Mr. Bigelow's disgust with democracy and enthusiasm for fuehrers always makes it interesting.

He is the patriarch of Malden-on-the-Hudson, with relatives and descendants, down to great-grandchildren, all up and down the river. He will be eighty-three years old on September 10.

He hunted birds eggs with the kaiser, forming a lifetime friendship, broken only by the war, which he charged the kaiser with having started. He recanted afterward and the two old men met annually to salute "Der Tag" when only the all-wise and all-just shall rule again.

Ten Million Americans to Honor Founder of Their Religious Faith

A Nation-Wide Communion Service in More Than 14,000 Congregations Will Recall the May Evening 200 Years Ago When John Wesley "Felt His Heart Strangely Warmed" and Took the Step Which Led Eventually to the Establishment of the Methodist Church.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ON SUNDAY morning, May 22, more than 9,000,000 Americans, members of 14,300 congregations, will take part in a nation-wide communion service honoring the memory of the founder of their religious faith.

Who was this man who gave to the world a form of religion so appealing that after 200 years he has 25,000,000 disciples all over the globe?

His name was John Wesley and he was the founder of the Methodist Episcopal church.

On the evening of May 24, 1738, a little group of people gathered in a small house in Aldersgate street, London, England, to conduct a prayer meeting.

They were members of the Church of England who had failed to find the stately service of that church all that they sought in the way of spiritual help.

In this company sat a slight young man in the robes of an Anglican churchman. For three months he had been passing through a period of intense inner struggle, due mainly to his unhappy experiences across the Atlantic ocean in General Oglethorpe's new colony of Georgia.

Of what happened at the prayer meeting, John Wesley afterward recorded in his diary: "In the evening I went very unwilling to a society in Aldersgate street, where one was reading Luther's preface to the Epistle to the Romans. About a quarter before nine, while he was describing the change that God works in the heart through faith in Christ, I felt my heart strangely warmed. I felt I did trust in Christ, Christ alone, for my salvation; and an assurance was given me that he had taken away my sins, even mine, and saved me from the law of sin and death."

Although Wesley never recognized his followers as belonging to another than the Church of England, this Aldersgate meeting is designated by Methodists today as the beginning of their church, for from it Wesley went out to preach with a new enthusiasm. Also, soon afterwards the authorities closed the doors and pulpits of their churches to him and to his brother, Charles, and all the other preachers of the Methodist societies, which led them to organize a new church.

Wesley was born in 1703, the son of Rev. Samuel Wesley, rector of the Anglican church at Epworth, England. He attended Charterhouse until he was seventeen, and then went to Christ Church College, Oxford, on a medical scholarship from his father.

At his ordination Wesley met a fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford, where he was a leading member of a club. These scholars on every phase of their lives had the deepest discussion.

In 1729 the elder Wesley died and a year later John and his younger brother, Charles, set out brother had been. However, this did not halt his work in his parish.

Eventually, however, there arose a situation which resulted in his following his brother back to England. This was an unhappy love affair that had caused the "intense inner struggle" (referred to earlier in this article) and led to his evangelical conversion.

Among Oglethorpe's colonists were a Mr. and Mrs. Causton an dtheir niece, Sophie Hopkey, eighteen years old, beautiful, intelligent and a very pious member of the Church of England.

Wesley and Sophy were immediately attracted to each other and General Oglethorpe, becoming aware of the budding romance, did all he could to promote it. He wanted Wesley to stay in the colony and he believed that marriage would humanize the inflexible young moralist and perhaps make him more popular with the people.

As soon as Wesley saw that he had lost the girl he became embittered against her, so much so that eventually he refused to allow her to participate in communion in his church. The upshot of this was a suit for defamation of character by her husband which came to nothing, although it weakened Wesley's influence in the colony. So he decided to return to England.

Although disheartened by his experience in America, his stay here was far from being a failure. The meetings which he had held, and his zeal in the cause of Christianity had left their impress upon the colony. Besides that he had published in Charleston in 1737 a collection of hymns, the first Methodist songs ever gathered together.

Establishing the Church. In May occurred the previously mentioned experience in the little house in Aldersgate street which led directly to the establishment of the Methodist church. At first it was a group of people gathered in a small house in Aldersgate street, London, England, to conduct a prayer meeting.

They were members of the Church of England who had failed to find the stately service of that church all that they sought in the way of spiritual help. So they gathered, week after week, to seek additional strength in an informal meeting of this kind.

Although the worldwide Methodist celebration this month is for the purpose of honoring the name of John Wesley, founder of that church, it also recalls another clergyman of that sect who was one of the most remarkable figures in American history.

He was Francis Asbury, the first American Methodist bishop, the so-called "Prophet of the Long Road" and the apostle of that sturdy figure in frontier life, the circuit rider.

Born near Birmingham, England, in 1745, he was only fifteen years old when he began "to venture a work of exhortation." At eighteen he was a local preacher and at twenty-one he was received by Wesley into the itinerant ministry.

At that time there was only one Methodist church in America and there were only about 600 persons of that faith, chiefly in New York and Philadelphia. At the outbreak of the Revolution Asbury sympathized with the Patriots and while his ecclesiastical superior, a Mr. Rankin, returned to England, Asbury remained.

During the war he was so energetic in spreading the gospel of Methodism that by the end of the Revolution there were 83 Methodist ministers at work and the membership had increased to 14,000.

With the severing of political ties between the new nation and the mother country there was also the necessity for founding a separate church. Although there had been intimations of separation from the parent society as early as 1773, it was not until the Baltimore conference in December, 1784, that Asbury and Thomas Coke, whom Wesley had sent to America to direct the organization of the new church, were ordained as joint superintendents.

So with this authority back of him Asbury set out on the "Long Road" with the future of Methodism in this country in his keeping. He never married, lest a wife should distract his attention from his great work, and he had no home. For 45 years, in bad weather and in good, over wilderness roads and mountain trails, from Maine to Kentucky, he rode the circuits.

He slept wherever night overtook him, he shared the food of the pioneers in the rude mountain cabins, or dined on the crust of bread from his saddlebags. Six thousand miles on horseback was his stint of travel year in and year out.

He preached daily, often as many as three sermons a day, occasionally as many as five; he preached to the slaves in the kitchen.

FIND GRASS TONIC FOR ANIMAL LIFE

Nature's Gift Ranks With Sunshine, Air, Water.

By G. T. Klein, Extension Poultry Specialist, Massachusetts State College, WNU Service.

Poultrymen are going back to nature as a result of recent findings in scientific laboratories. We have found that short tender grass is one of nature's greatest gifts to animal life, ranking in importance with sunshine, air and water.

Chickens and turkeys which receive a liberal quantity of finely-cut tender grass every day throughout the growing period, in addition to a well-balanced grain ration, appear to develop a resistance to certain diseases and parasites. They usually grow more rapidly and consume less grain than do birds reared on a grass-free diet.

The cultivated grasses, such as oats, barley, Sudan, wheat, and rye, when grown on fertile soil, are high in protein, contain about 15 minerals, and all the known vitamins except D. Use of oat plants as much as possible during the year is recommended since these plants are palatable, easily grown and yield a high tonnage.

Where time does not permit cutting and feeding the grass daily, the next best practice is to have the grass available for the birds to range in during the growing period. A combination of the two systems gives excellent results. The main point is to feed the grass when it is young and tender.

The growing of green feeds for poultry seems to offer a way of reducing growing costs and building healthy, vigorous bodies capable of resisting disease and giving greater performance. Because of the saving in grain and good pasturage is now considered to be the most valuable feed crop grown on the poultry farm.

It Takes Time to Clean the Range for Chickens Clean range for young chickens is good insurance, according to H. L. Shrader of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Shrader defines a clean range as "one that has been free of chickens for at least two years and one on which poultry manure has not been spread." In two years, poultry parasites will die for lack of a chance to multiply.

An ideal range, Shrader adds, also supplies plenty of shade for the hot summer months and an abundant supply of succulent green feed and fresh water that is not contaminated by parasites.

Calves on Wire The big problem with little bossy is to keep her dry and out of drafts until she gets well accustomed to this strange world. A wire floor in the calf pen is one way in which to keep the baby dry, says Hoard's Dairyman.

Good grain storage on the farm is the first step in conservation. Twenty-eight degrees above zero is the temperature at which eggs freeze.

The 1937 American cotton crop was 18,700,000 bales, the largest on record. Wether lambs usually sell at least $1 a hundredweight higher than ram lambs.

Milk proteins and vitamins are especially needed for good hatchability. Common salt is the only mineral that is almost always lacking in feeds.

Dairy cows need many minerals. Fortunately, the usual combinations of feeds supply most of them. The number of women who make their living on farms, according to the last agricultural census, was 909,939.

Alfalfa hay that is green and leafy is a big help in the ration of hens that are producing eggs for hatching purposes. Peanut growing as an industry is far more important than generally supposed, outranking silver mining when unsubsidized by the government.

The useful life of a horse averages about 13 years; the period of greatest value is from five to seven years of age. The condition of a fleece at the time of shearing and marketing, even more than the quality and quantity of the wool, may affect the selling price.

Salt for poultry is generally added to the ration at the rate of one-half to one per cent, to increase palatability and aid digestion.

felt my heart strangely warmed. I felt I did trust in Christ, Christ alone, for my salvation; and an assurance was given me that he had taken away my sins, even mine, and saved me from the law of sin and death."

Although Wesley never recognized his followers as belonging to another than the Church of England, this Aldersgate meeting is designated by Methodists today as the beginning of their church, for from it Wesley went out to preach with a new enthusiasm.

Also, soon afterwards the authorities closed the doors and pulpits of their churches to him and to his brother, Charles, and all the other preachers of the Methodist societies, which led them to organize a new church.

Wesley was born in 1703, the son of Rev. Samuel Wesley, rector of the Anglican church at Epworth, England. He attended Charterhouse until he was seventeen, and then went to Christ Church College, Oxford, on a medical scholarship from his father.

brother had been. However, this did not halt his work in his parish. Eventually, however, there arose a situation which resulted in his following his brother back to England.

Among Oglethorpe's colonists were a Mr. and Mrs. Causton an dtheir niece, Sophie Hopkey, eighteen years old, beautiful, intelligent and a very pious member of the Church of England.

Wesley and Sophy were immediately attracted to each other and General Oglethorpe, becoming aware of the budding romance, did all he could to promote it.

As soon as Wesley saw that he had lost the girl he became embittered against her, so much so that eventually he refused to allow her to participate in communion in his church.

Although disheartened by his experience in America, his stay here was far from being a failure. The meetings which he had held, and his zeal in the cause of Christianity had left their impress upon the colony.

Establishing the Church. In May occurred the previously mentioned experience in the little house in Aldersgate street which led directly to the establishment of the Methodist church.

They were members of the Church of England who had failed to find the stately service of that church all that they sought in the way of spiritual help. So they gathered, week after week, to seek additional strength in an informal meeting of this kind.

In this company sat a slight young man in the robes of an Anglican churchman. For three months he had been passing through a period of intense inner struggle, due mainly to his unhappy experiences across the Atlantic ocean in General Oglethorpe's new colony of Georgia.

Of what happened at the prayer meeting, John Wesley afterward recorded in his diary: "In the evening I went very unwilling to a society in Aldersgate street, where one was reading Luther's preface to the Epistle to the Romans. About a quarter before nine, while he was describing the change that God works in the heart through faith in Christ, I felt my heart strangely warmed. I felt I did trust in Christ, Christ alone, for my salvation; and an assurance was given me that he had taken away my sins, even mine, and saved me from the law of sin and death."

chens of the southern planter, he preached to the housewives of New England. Wherever he could gather together a few willing to listen he preached.

Towards the last his labors were frequently interrupted by severe attacks of illness which confined him to his bed for long periods. Yet he would not give up. His indomitable will drove him on in the performance of his duty.

All these years he had ridden horseback. It became impossible for him to do so longer. He had worn out many horses, and in his autobiography he looks back with regret upon "Jane," "Fox," and "Spark." Philadelphia friends provided him with "a light, little four-wheeled carriage," into which he could be lifted, for he insisted on going forward.

"I suppose I have crossed the Allegheny mountains sixty times," he once said. He never retired; he never gave up. Death found him still going on with his work.

A week before he died he preached his last sermon in Richmond, Va. Tuberculosis had laid its hand upon him and he was so weak that his friends tried to dissuade him from preaching. But he insisted upon being carried into the church and, seated on a table in the pulpit, he preached for an hour. Then he was carried to his bed in the home of a friend near Fredericksburg, Va., where he died on Sunday morning, March 31, 1816.

Of Asbury it has been said: "Few characters if any in all the history of the American continent stand out more clearly in rugged simplicity, in devotion to an ideal than does the character of this greatest of itinerant preachers."

SYNOPSIS

Ruth Chiswick of L C ranch, obsessed by fear of danger to her outspoken father, Lee, from a band of lawless rustlers headed by Sperm Howard, decides to save him by eloping with young Lou Howard, Sperm's son...

The strong jaw of the cattleman set. "I'll have him rounded up and rubbed out before he's 24 hours older."

Ruth gave up. She packed the tobacco, the books, and the food. For Pat she put in a corn-cob pipe to replace the broken clay one.

"Must I?" He grinned at her with cheerful effrontery. "Of course you must," Ruth almost stamped her foot in exasperation.

"I thought so." Gray turned to the line-riding. "Two shots were fired before Mr. Chiswick's friends took a hand. I fired the second. Point is, who cut loose with the first?"

"I've asked myself that two-three times since I've repented suitably. Plumb dumb of me. For 20 years I've been minding my own business exclusive, yet soon as I hit Tail Holt I butt into yours, not only once but se-ve-real times. I wouldn't know why, unless I've gone loco."

"You beat around the bush without telling anything," the girl charged. "By your own story you shot at the boss once," Sorley snapped.

"Go to the head of the class, Miss," Gray said, with a grim ironic smile. "It's the best story I could think up after three or four days, so I thought I would come back and try it on Lee Chiswick."

"You and yore friends are so handy with guns I never get time to make oration," he said dryly. "Distress flooded her. She had shot him, after he had perhaps saved the life of her father."

"No. It's true." The girl drew a deep breath of relief. "I'm awfully glad it is." The wounded man looked at her. "What difference does it make to you whether I or someone else shot him?"

"I'm going to see you again, am I? How nice! There are several things you can bring me. One is some tobacco. I'd like two three books, and the latest newspaper you have. Also, bring Lee Chiswick. I want a powwow with him."

"What name shall I say?" asked Reynolds.

the man. Then he ran forward to protect you, and we all thought he was the killer. Think it over, Father. From the position you were standing the bullet that creased you must have been fired in the alley, but this Gray came another direction."

"Got it all figured out, haven't you—with his help?" Lee said angrily. "If he had been the man, would he have run forward into the nest of us? It isn't reasonable. He was taken by surprise when Dan began shooting at him. I could see that."

"That's fair," Ruth agreed. "I don't know anything about who he is. Maybe he's an outlaw on the dodge. He's as hard as iron and he may have gone bad. But there's something clean about him. He wouldn't shoot a man in the back. I'd stake everything I had on that."

Lee Chiswick broke into his daughter's story excitedly. "He's hanging around waiting for a chance to dry-gulch me." Ruth shook her head. "I thought so at first. I don't now. Listen."

But this new version of the picture is going to be something different, judging by the cast. It will star Shirley Temple—and will include Bert Lahr and Bill Robinson.

Every so often come rumors that Maude Adams will appear on the screen. Now it's David Selznick who is said to have captured her, to play the dowager in "The Young in Heart," with Janet Gaynor, Paulette Goddard, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Roland Young in the cast.

Remember that little native lad in "Gunga Din"? You'll see him in "Elephant Din," with Victor McLaglen, Cary Grant, and Jack Oakie.

If you want to see a movie star in the making, go to "Accidents Will Happen" and see Gloria Blondell, sister of Joan. She's on her way. She has been for quite a while, so far as that's concerned, but it is just leading her to the movies, because she didn't want to cash in on her sister's success.

Discusses the NEED FOR IODINE

Key Substance of the Thyroid Gland—Tells How to Avoid Iodine Starvation

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

THE discovery of our vital need for iodine is one of the most thrilling chapters in the long history of scientific research.

Many investigators contributed to our understanding of iodine hunger, but special credit is due to Dr. David Marine and his co-workers; and to Dr. E. C. Kendall of the Mayo Clinics at Rochester, Minn.

Today we know that although it constitutes only about one part in three million parts of the body weight, iodine is so essential that its absence from the diet may have the gravest consequences.

Thyroid—The Gland of Growth Iodine is necessary for the normal functioning of the thyroid gland, situated in the front part of the neck. The thyroid is so important that it is often regarded as the throttle which governs the human locomotive, and when it fails to function normally, the body machinery may be thrown out of balance.

Thyroid disturbance during childhood may affect mental and physical development, and many children have been accused of laziness who are suffering from thyroid deficiency. Thyroid disorder may be a complicating factor in obesity, and specialists have found that it is associated with many stubborn skin diseases.

Disfiguring Goiter Simple goiter is a common disorder of the thyroid gland. At one time the very mention of this disease terrified girls and women, who feared the unsightly lump in the neck which disfigures the victim. Now, thanks to dramatic experiments, we know that simple goiter is an iodine deficiency disease.

Animal Experiments Way In 1916, it was shown that a million young pigs annually in Wisconsin. Investigation disclosed that their thyroid glands were abnormally large and abnormally low in iodine. When iodine was administered to the mothers, the young pigs were born normal.

Scientists reasoned that if goiter could be prevented in animals, it could be prevented in humans, and undertook the now famous census in Akron, Ohio. A study was made of the thyroid glands of all school girls from the fifth to the twelfth grades. Almost 50 per cent were found to have enlarged thyroid glands.

The girls were given small doses of sodium iodide dissolved in drinking water at given periods over 2½ years. At the end of that time, investigators found that of 2,000 pupils, only 5 developed thyroid enlargement. Of the same number not treated, 600 showed enlargement.

Danger Periods This demonstration aroused the interest of the scientific world and gave impetus to additional experiments which increased our knowledge of the iodine requirement.

The great danger periods are during pregnancy, childhood and adolescence. The diet of the expectant mother must include an adequate supply to protect herself and avoid the early development of simple goiter in the child.

It is also essential to provide sufficient iodine for growing children, as the incidence of the disease increases steadily up to the age of 15.

water, and recent evidence has disclosed that there was a sound basis for this belief. Two investigators found that the water in a large part of the northern half of the United States falls into a low-iodine classification.

Several communities have given consideration to the prevention of goiter by the addition of iodine to the water supply. This method is commendable but it must be borne in mind that wherever iodine is taken in forms other than food, careful supervision by the physician or the public health authorities is necessary.

To those homemakers interested in planning the best possible diet for their families, I shall gladly send lists showing which foods are rich in iodine and which are poor in this substance.

Questions Answered

Miss C. T.—Agar-agar is a non-irritating, indigestible carbohydrate. As it is not digested, its caloric value is zero, and it could not possibly be fattening.

Mrs. B. R. S.—The average meal leaves the stomach within four hours, though a large meal may stay for five hours. However, the length of time food remains in the stomach is only a fraction of that required for the entire digestive process, which varies in normal individuals from 12 to 47 hours.

Miss S. G.—There is no justification for serving toast at every meal instead of bread. It is true that proper toasting changes some of the starch to dextrine which is quickly and easily digested. But laboratory experiments reveal that the proteins of toasted bread and crusts have a lower digestibility, and animals gain less weight when fed on them than on the untoasted bread and the inside crumbs of the loaf.

Mrs. M. S. F.—I do not approve of the strictly vegetarian diet because it is unbalanced. One who desires to omit all animal foods from the diet must also omit the top-notch protective foods, milk and eggs. It is doubtful if adequate protein could be supplied without milk, eggs or meat. Good health is best maintained on a balanced diet, and is such a priceless possession that I cannot understand why anyone should risk the consequences of consuming a one-sided diet.

BOY LEGISLATORS SEEK RE-ELECTION

On Saturday, May 11, we, Hayward Quillen and Billy Ready, had the honor of representing Harrington High School in the House of Representatives at the "Boys' State" held in the Legislative Building at Dover.

We left Harrington at 8:35 A. M., accompanied by Mr. Withey, of the faculty, and registered immediately upon our arrival at Dover. A Kent county caucus was held shortly after 9 A. M., at which time we elected the acting state executives that had been allotted to Kent county. Following this, a joint session of the House and the Senate was held, at which time we were addressed by Governor McMullen, other state officials and the Department commander of the American Legion, Daniel Conant, of Rehoboth Beach—and also the "Boys' State" Governor Price. After the dissolution of the joint session, both houses recessed until 1:30 for lunch. Upon our return to the legislative building and business, many bills were introduced, but discussion was chiefly on the welfare and civil bills, both of which were passed after several amendments had been added. The body adjourned at 4:00 P. M.

It is our feeling, along with the other boys from all over the state, that the "Boys' State" was most educational, and we sincerely hope that it will become an annual affair and that we have the opportunity of attending next year's session. We wish to thank the American Legion and 408 for sponsoring the "Boys' State" and the local organizations, consisting of the American Legion Post, the Chamber of Commerce, the Harrington Fire Company, the Rotary Club and the Century Club, who donated the money to cover our expenses.—Hayward Quillen, "Representative"; Billy Ready, "Attache."

SAFETY COUNCIL NOTES

The Delaware Safety Council is somewhat amazed in which many people regard safety. Some think that the practice of reasonable care and caution is a demonstration of cowardice and is something associated with children or old people in their dotage. Others flaunt their disregard of safety as an indication of their bravery and hardness, when as a matter of fact, this is merely an indication of exaggerated egotism.

A continued disregard of safe thinking and acting can, beyond the slightest doubt, bring nothing but tragedy to those involved or their associates. Safety is a practical ideal and is merely the state of mind to which the individual, who practices it, has arrived at the point where they intelligently analyze the modern day hazards and apply such methods as will cope with them.

Life is replete with hazards, many of which can never be eliminated, but surely there is no excuse for continually exposing oneself to the liability of an unnecessary accident.

Can you imagine for a moment that Commander Byrd or Colonel Lindberg overlooked the element of safety in their exploits? Did they make their plans for safety in secret as though it was something to be ashamed of? You know the answer as well as the Council.

O. O. McIntyre:
A book that fascinated me is Gelett Burgess' "Look Eleven Years Younger." Burgess has the liveliest mind I know in the writing world and this book proves it. It's different.

Emily Post:
"I think you have not only found the elixir of youth for yourself, but are giving your readers all the ingredients of which it is made.
As one who could never have taught little children manners without help from "THE GOOPS, I am sure that no question about Charm can from now on be answered without turning to your advice on being—not merely looking—Eleven Years Younger."

New York Times:
It is a witty book, but not a particularly amusing one. It is encouraging, but not flattering; indeed, it is quite stern. But it ought to be genuinely stimulating and useful, along lines of definite and sensible self-help.

William Lyon Phelps:
Nonfiction—
1. Look Eleven Years Younger.
The advice given here by Mr. Burgess, accompanied as it is by photographs that should produce conviction of sin, must be taken to heart; for I believe everyone over 30 can here learn something to his advantage. He tells us to beware of mannerisms and acquiescence; and his pictures of real people show how persons of 40 are already beginning to jell. Look out!

"Look Eleven Years Younger"

By Gelett Burgess

New York World-Telegram:
Thirty years ago, in 1907, Gelett Burgess wrote "Are You a Bromide?" It fell like a bomb from the sky and took the town by storm.

Now he writes a hopeful, exhilarating book that effects you as if your grammar school teacher has taken you by the collar and is shaking you awake. I don't usually hold with books written by professional smile salesmen. Gelett Burgess is not a professional exhorter; he means what he says, and he has said it all his life.

This is a useful book. I recommend it. So do Simon & Schuster, who hope it will catch up with Dale Carnegie's "How to Win Friends," now past 500,000. So far as I'm concerned, it's already left Carnegie asleep at the post.

Providence, R. I. Journal:
This is not a beautician's manual. There is no routine of exercise creams and massage offered. It is simply a careful, entertaining study of the unnecessary surrender we are wont to make to habit. Read it and weep! But then dry your eyes and reform.

Mr. Burgess will be at the Journal office at 5:30 o'clock Wednesday afternoon and will autograph all copies of his book.

St. Louis Globe-Democrat:
One can't help feeling at least a few months younger after reading Gelett Burgess' latest contribution to the library of how to improve oneself. The spirit in which it is written, aside from the sound advice contained therein, assures a sensation of chronological retrogression."

For he has a vivid, semi-humorous style which emphasizes his views on the unconscious things we do which add to our appearance of growing older.

The book should be a huge success and drive people to making themselves not only younger, but far more attractive to themselves their families and their companions. We are all for it.
