

ROTARY CLUB HAS BIGGEST NIGHT IN ITS HISTORY

Gelett Burgess And Charles B. Driscoll, Lettuce And Butter-milk Champions, Speakers

GOVERNOR OEO. WILLIAMS GUEST

Gelett Burgess and Charles B. Driscoll were the principal speakers at the Inter-City Meeting and Ladies' Night dinner given by the Harrington Rotary Club at the Century Club Wednesday evening. The former is the author of the best non-fiction book of the year, "Look Eleven Years Younger," while the latter is the author of the most widely read column published today, "New York Day by Day."

The two distinguished authors changed characters for the evening. Driscoll, who writes in a serious vein, delivered a humorous address, and Burgess, noted as a humorist, chose a serious subject. However, both speakers had enough variety to make their talks well balanced.

Mr. Driscoll, who has been editor of the McNaught Syndicate for many years, and who edited the column of O. O. McIntyre during that time, gave the audience a number of hilarious moments by describing his run-in with a road cop just before he reached Harrington, and later spoke at length on the characteristics of McIntyre. He described him as the most careful writer in the selection of subject matter, but the most indifferent about the condition of his manuscripts, which were made up of bits of paper pasted together, closely typed lines, badly spaced and frequently running off the edge of the paper. Odd had a pronounced inferiority complex and never believed that he could write. Others told him that he could write—but they failed to convince him. He stocked the remodeled home in Gallipolis, Ohio— which he never occupied—with all kinds of provisions, enough to last a long time—because he dreaded the day when the people would "wake up to the fact that I can not write."

Mr. Driscoll's biography of McIntyre is now running in the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

At the conclusion of his address, Mr. Driscoll was presented with a huge pitcher of buttermilk, of which beverage he is passionately fond.

Mr. Burgess, in whose honor the tables were decorated with lettuce, insisted that he did not taste the lettuce: "I never eat the table decorations."

His talk was along the line of his latest book, which critics have classed as one of the most unusual books ever published. "Old age is a habit," said Mr. Burgess, and he just about proved his point. Mannerisms make age; youth passes, but youthfulness lives. Needless gestures, such as rubbing the hands, craning the neck, cocking the head to one side, become more pronounced the longer they control you—and you are old before your time.

A few pointers from his address will convince you of the logic of the humorist turned philosopher:

"When you know your age, others won't know it. Youth can be aged and age youthful. The surrender to any form of emotionalism makes you appear older. Beauty parlors cannot make you youthful. The only efficacious facial massage is done from within by the mind. It is more important to keep your expression youthful than your complexion. Your subconscious Satan works harder on your face than any beauty experts and is working all the time. To be youthful ask questions and let age answer time."

"Premature old age is like a runaway horse that carries you down hill towards the state where before long you actually lose control of many of your minor actions. You scratch your head, you pick your teeth, forget your table manners, yawn, mumble and drool and do things you would have laughed or shuddered at when you were young. You don't care. The milk is in your whiskers and the egg is in your vest."

Frank Cline, president of the Salisbury Rotary Club, was the first speaker. A splendid story teller and an entertaining speaker, he put the audience in a happy mood—and kept it that way.

George S. Williams, District Governor, delivered an excellent address in which he lauded the work of Rotary.

The orchestra was under the direction of Oscar Nemish. Piano solos by Albert S. Gottlieb, vocal solos by Mrs. Oscar Nemish Rotarians and their ladies from nineteen clubs had been invited—and most of them were represented.

STATE GRANGERS OBSERVED RURAL LIFE SUNDAY

Grangers from all parts of the state gathered at Barratt's Chapel, near Frederica, Sunday afternoon to observe the annual Rural Life Sunday. Virtually all of the 30 granges in the state were represented.

The Rev. Frank Herson, pastor of the Avenue M. E. Church, Milford, and grand chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Delaware, A. F. and A. M., preached from the text, "He Giveth to All Life and Breath and All Things," stressing that beauty is to be seen and profited from in every day life by all persons if they only give thought to it.

However, he remarked, many persons fail to see these beauties of life, and said that agrangers brought up with nature in the outdoors, have the best opportunity to observe what nature, given by God, means.

The service was attended by 350 grangers, headed by Clarence E. Jester, of the Milford Grange, state master, and all other officers of the state grange. Former Governor Robert P. Robinson, a past state master, was among those attending.

COMMUNITY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL

A Community Vacation Bible School is being planned for the children and young people of Harrington and nearby communities from June 20th to July 1st. The school sessions will be held in the Harrington Public Schools, 9 to 12 o'clock each morning from Monday thru to Friday for two weeks. The faculty will consist of the pastors and workers from the cooperating churches. The school is open to all white children from three years and six months of age to young people of sixteen years. There will be four departments grouped according to ages. The type of work will be very much like the children and young people are now doing in their own Sunday Schools. The school will be non-sectarian and the text books will be books that are being used by all denominations. This will be an opportunity for the children and young people of this and nearby communities to receive additional religious training under the supervision of pastors who have had previous experience in this field.

Growers, who average around four to five acres of berries among their crops, are going to be hit by this crop failure. Although the government is not prepared to make good these losses by handing them out a check, there are several government agencies which are in a position to render them some assistance.

Benjamin C. Depue, national representative in Delaware of the Farm Security Administration, stated that his organization makes loans on generous terms to farmers in financial distress. Loans may be made for operating expenses such as fertilizer, labor, packages, etc. They are repaid by a farm management plan worked out jointly by the FSA and the farm supervisor and the farmer, and designed to put the farmer back on a sound basis, in order to restore the farm family to economic independence and security. In certain unusual cases of unusual cases of acute financial need, small grants of funds are made to tide a family over until the loan becomes effective.

The whole program of rehabilitation of the Farm Security Administration is a sound business proposition, in no way connected with any "bonus" or dole. Over 75 per cent of the loans made through this agency are being repaid with interest as they fall due, a record of which many a private bank might be proud.

For further information on how the Farm Security Administration may be of help, farmers are invited to write or visit the office of Mr. Deputy, 149 South Bradford Street, Dover.

Within a few days each farmer will receive from the office of Russell E. Wilson, agricultural agent and secretary of the Kent County Agricultural Conservation Association, a letter containing this information and a printed circular explaining the objectives and purposes of this farm program relating to Delaware. Further assistance in understanding this program may be obtained from the county committee including R. Harry Wilson, H. Clifford Clark and Laurence E. Cain, in the county extension office, second floor of the postoffice building in Dover, C. Arthur Taylor, of Harrington, president of the state committee, or the county agent.

In accordance with the administrative ruling of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, each farm in the program has been given an allotment of general soil-depleting crops including wheat and Irish potato allotments, and the number of units of soil-building practices which must be met to earn the maximum payments. This year farmers may harvest more wheat than indicated on these allotment reports, but in seeding wheat this fall they should not exceed these allotted acres if they expect to comply with this program. The wheat acreage re-diffusion required is 16 percent of the base acreage over a period of the past ten years.

On those farms, however, where the usual acreage of soil-depleting crops is under fifty acres, and where there are no wheat or potato allotments, farmers will be permitted to grow up to and including fifty acres in depleting crops this year and still be in a position to earn maximum payments.

The aims of the 1938 program are similar to those of the 1937 agricultural conservation program in which farmers were offered payments for diverting acreage from soil-depleting crops to soil-conserving crops, and for carrying out approved soil-building practices. Under the 1938 program there have been designated maximum acreage allotments for specified soil-depleting crops, and minimum goals for soil-building.

Police sought two missing suitcases of Charles B. Driscoll, New York columnist, Thursday, the man who did not get a ticket for speeding Wednesday.

Driscoll, successor to O. O. McIntyre on "New York Day by Day," escaped the ticket, and lost the bags within 24 hours in Delaware.

His suitcase and portfolio were stolen just before he left his hotel Thursday morning.

And Wednesday night, on his way to a banquet in Harrington, Driscoll told a state policeman, pursuing him as a speeder, that he "thought he was an escort."

The trooper scratched a thoughtful head and let him go.

The portfolio, Driscoll said Thursday morning, contained personal letters, including letters from "fans."

RUMOR OF GOVERNMENT PAY FOR STRAWBERRY DAMAGE WRONG

There seems to be an Alice-in-Wonderland rumor in southern Delaware, a rumor that government hand-out entirely untrue in fact. According to the government story, the government is ready to pay a sort of "deficiency bonus" to farmers suffering from crop failure. For instance, if a ball storm destroyed all or part of a farmer's produce, a government agent would make up with a pay check to the owner of the orchard, sufficient to cover his loss! This rumor, which apparently originated in somebody's foolish thinking, even has it that thousands of government agents are going round the country with check books ready to make up crop deficiencies.

Ordinarily it would seem scarcely necessary to deny such idle invention, but in this case owing to the insistence with which it is being circulated, the government must refute it in no uncertain terms. There is no such "deficiency bonus" here never has been any, and there is no reason to believe there ever will be.

The strawberry crop in Bridgeville, Seaford, Millsboro, and other sections of southern Delaware has been hard hit this year. The damage has been caused primarily by strawberry weevil, and to a lesser extent by the spring drouth. It is estimated that the Bridgeville yield will not run over 25 per cent of the normal crop. The Bridgeville market is the largest strawberry shipping center in the state.

Milk, fruits, vegetables and whole grains build strong teeth. The crowns of the teeth begin to form before the baby is born.

Remember: Sunshine helps to form good bones and teeth. Breast feeding makes well developed jaws. Mouth breathing, sucking pacifiers, empty bottles, fingers and thumbs mar the shape of the face.

There is no such thing as a cavity too small to fill. Have the six molars examined and filled if necessary as soon as they come through the gum.

When toothache comes it may be too late to save the tooth. Disease of the teeth means danger to the health of the body. Clean teeth at least twice daily—bedtime being the most important.

Take your child to the dentist regularly.

Congratulations are extended to the Misses Ruth Van Hoy, Lillas Moore and the Misses James and William Webb and Benjamin Betts, Frederica pupils graduating from Felton High School this year. This group accompanied their classmates on a three-day visit to Washington last week.

The American Legion Services will be held at Barratt's Chapel at 11 A. M., Decoration Day.

Lloyd Wilcuts was recently burned when he tripped while carrying a bucket of tar, which splashed on his face and arms. He was treated at the Milford Hospital. He has returned home.

"Prince of Caricaturists" Drew A Famous Memorial Day Picture

Twice in His Career, Thomas Nast, America's Greatest Cartoonist, Laid Aside the Trenchant Pencil That Helped Win the Civil War and Took Up the Brush to Make Paintings That Breathe the Spirit of Reconciliation Between the Blue and the Gray.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
HIS name is a synonym for merciless caricature and stinging pictorial satire which made him the most powerful political cartoonist America has ever known. And yet he could lay down the trenchant pencil that made politicians writhe and pick up crayon or brush to produce with tenderness and reverence two pictures symbolical of the spirit of Memorial Day.

One of them was a simple newspaper sketch, "With Charity to All, with Malice Toward None—Abraham Lincoln," first reproduced in the New York Illustrated Times September 19, 1881. The other was "Peace in Union," a magnificent canvas, nine by twelve feet, which he painted in 1895 and which now hangs in the G. A. R. hall at Galena, Ill.

In both, the Blue and the Gray clasp hands in forgiveness of past hatreds and in token of renewed friendship and future trust. And the man who delineated them thus was one who had used his talent to help prosecute a vigorous war until the superior numbers and resources of the determined Blue had worn down the resistance of the brilliant Gray and forced an acknowledgment of defeat. How well he used that talent is shown in the tribute paid him by two of the chief figures in the conflict of 1861-65.

Lincoln called him "our best recruiting sergeant." Ulysses S. Grant said "he was the foremost figure in civil life developed by the war. He did as much as any one man to preserve the Union and bring the war to an end." His name was Thomas Nast.

It was high praise indeed for the German immigrant boy who had grown up in poverty in lower New York. But history has confirmed his estimate of him. For in later years he was to become even more important in helping shape American history—to be a maker of Presidents and to overthrow, almost single-handed, the most corrupt political organization the country had ever known.

Born in Bavaria. Nast was born in Landau, Bavaria, September 27, 1824, the son of a musician in the band of the Ninth Bavarian regiment. Foreseeing the revolution which was soon to convulse Europe the elder Nast emigrated to America when young Thomas was six years old.

The boy was educated in the public schools of New York city and early displayed a talent for drawing. At the age of fourteen he took a six-months' course of battle pictures to the illustrated press of New York, London and Paris. When he returned to the United States in February, 1861, it was with a training in sketching battle scenes such as had been enjoyed by no other American artist.

Nast's first Civil War pictures were made for Leslie's Illustrated News but in July, 1862, he joined the staff of Harper's Weekly, an association which was to bring him his greatest fame. Already a defeatist sentiment had sprung up in the North and there was loud and insistent clamor for "peace at any price" with the South. To combat this sentiment Nast drew a bitter cartoon called "Compromise With the South" which was at once recognized as one of the most powerful pictorial editorials ever produced. It was used for campaign purposes and was circulated by the millions. It turned the tide against the defeatists and did much to solidify the war sentiment in the North.

Nast was a great admirer of Grant. In 1868 when the general ran for President, the artist drew his famous cartoon with the title "Match Him." It not only became an important campaign document itself but it inspired many songs and poems which were published under the same fall of Tweed, came another political symbol made immortal by Nast's pencil—the Tammany tiger. Yet this, and the Democratic donkey, were only two of several symbolical figures which came from his pen. He developed the elongated figure of Uncle Sam and the rag-doll baby of inflation, the square cap and the full dinner pail of labor and finally, the Republican elephant.

This symbol came about when James Gordon Bennett's New York Herald was greatly agitated at the thought of a possible third term for President Grant. Nast depicted the Herald as a donkey in a lion's skin rushing through the jungle frightening the other animals with its braying. The Republican vote, grown large and awkward, was represented as a clumsy elephant on the brink of a precipice and almost ready to plunge into an abyss labeled "chaos." From that time on the Republican party was almost invariably pictured as an elephant.

Supports T. R.

When the Hayes-Tilden campaign of 1876 developed into a bitter feud, Nast's cartoons were of so much aid to the Republicans that he was sent a check for $10,000. Wishing to retain some semblance of independence in politics, Nast returned the check. But this was a forecast of his action in 1884 when he electrified the nation by refusing to support the Republican candidate, James G. Blaine, and instead swung his support—as did Harper's Weekly—to Grover Cleveland. But more important to his future was the fact that, although he did not support the national Republican ticket, he did support a young New Yorker named Theodore Roosevelt and that action later bore important fruit for him.

Although Nast returned to the Republican fold in 1892, his temporary defection from its ranks in 1884 lost many friends for him. At the same time financial disaster overtook him. Always a great admirer of Grant, he invested his entire fortune in the book publishing company of Grant and Ward. When it failed in 1884, Nast was left almost penniless.

Then he left Harper's Weekly and drifted from one publication to another. He established Nast's Weekly but it lasted only a short time. He bought a silver mine in Colorado but it failed to recoup his fortunes as he had hoped. It became increasingly difficult for him to get a position on newspapers for public taste had changed and his type of cartoons were no longer popular.

For the next 16 years this man, who had been called the "Prince of Caricaturists" and the "Father of the American Cartoon," was called upon frequently to deny reports that he was dead. In 1901 he was sought out by Leslie's Weekly, the magazine which 45 years earlier had given him his first job, and engaged to do a Christmas picture—his last.

Early the next year Theodore Roosevelt, who remembered gratefully Nast's support in 1884 and acting on the recommendation of Nast's friend, John Hay, appointed him to the obscure position of consul at Guayaquil in Ecuador. He died there of yellow fever on December 7, 1902.

study under Theodore Kaufman, an artist of some note, but that was all the training he ever had. When he was fifteen Nast secured a job making drawings for Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper. His salary was $4 a week. But such was his skill that, despite his youth, he was soon being given important assignments.

The first of these was to cover the Morrissey-Heenan prize fight at Long Point, Canada, in 1853; and when Heenan fought Sayers at Aldershot in England two years later Nast was sent there to make sketches of that "battle of the century." After this fight Heenan advanced Nast enough money to go to Italy, where he joined Garibaldi's army.

While there he served as an aide on the Italian liberator's staff and was entrusted with several diplomatic missions of considerable importance. But this did not interfere with his drawing and he contributed numerous Nast's pen against "Boss" Tweed is the outstanding example in American journalism of the power of the cartoon. As early as 1857 Nast had begun campaigning against the corrupt government of New York city which in a period of less than 30 months had defrauded the taxpayers of $30,000,000 and added $50,000,000 to the public debt. Huge sums were paid to favored firms in city contracts in which members of the ring profited. By 1868 Nast had singled out the principal individual targets for his political satire and chief among them, of course, was "Boss" Tweed himself. Friends urged Nast to give up what they called "a hopeless battle" and it was even hinted that he might be assassinated if he persisted. But he persisted he did.

Tweed was at first contemptuous of Nast's biting attacks and then defiant. "What are you going to do about it?" he said, when pressed by interviewers.

An Uneasy Boss. But Nast's relentless cartoon criticism finally aroused him. The famous picture called "Who Stole the People's Money?" showing a group of men standing in a circle and each pointing to the man to his right, particularly disturbed the "Boss."

"Let's stop them d-d pictures," he said, when he saw it. "I don't care so much what the papers write about me—my constituents can't read; but, d-n it, they can see pictures!"

Nast's "money-bag" caricature of Tweed, with a dollar sign for the facial features, also struck home, and as a climax to his blasts was the famous "Tammany Tiger Loose" cartoon, just before the election.

Tweed was convicted, sentenced to serve 12 years, but was released after little more than a year. He was then faced with a suit by the state for $8,000,000 and, in default of surety for $3,000,000 ball, was committed to the Ludlow street jail.

He was not actually confined, however, being permitted to ride in the afternoon and have dinner at home. One day he took advantage of this liberty and escaped.

It was a fitting finale to Nast's pictorial crusade against the Boss that one of his cartoons resulted in Tweed's capture in Spain. The cartoon appeared on June 27, 1876, and showed Tweed, in a remarkable likeness, "demonstrating his qualifications for the New York governorship by his willingness to bring to justice any number of lesser thieves"—the thieves being symbolized by two street Arabs, whom he is dragging to punishment.

Authorities at Vigo, Spain, where Tweed was arrested, had been supplied with a copy of this cartoon. Under orders to seize and detain him, they gathered from the picture that he was a kidnaper of little children! The cable announcing his arrest said that he had been identified and captured "on the charge of kidnapping two American children."

Tweed was brought back to America, and died in the Ludlow street jail on April 12, 1878.

Origin of the Tiger. Nast once was asked how he came to draw the tiger representing Tammany. "How did it occur to me?" he replied. "I don't know. The head of a tiger in a ring was the emblem of the Big Six, the old fire company that Tweed used to belong to. It was also adopted as the emblem of the American club. When this organization became known as Tammany hall, against which I was waging war, I hit upon this emblem. I attached a body to the head and thus had the tiger that we have heard so much about ever since. One day on the street car I saw a man near me looking at one of my Tammany cartoons with great interest. Finally his face assumed a look of terrible fierceness and, drawing up his clenched fist and with an exclamation of the bitterest hatred, he struck the picture of the tiger full in the head. I knew that I, too, had made a hit."

"Looking back over my experiences," he declared further, "I deem it one of my most satisfying reflections that I never allowed myself to attack anything that I did not believe in my soul was wrong and deserving the worst fate that could befall it."

Besides giving us the political symbols already named Nast also had much to do with making Santa Claus the familiar figure that he is. In the early sixties he was commissioned to illustrate Dr. Clemen's "The Night Before Christmas." Nast, the Bavarian-born, remembering the old "Pelze-Nickel" (Fur-Nicholas) of his childhood, adapted him to Moore's line and thus gave us the merry old fellow clad in furs, with his cap, boots, pipe and bag of toys.

The CLAY MASK

"I shall be a little late tonight," Merrick told his wife as he threw out the clutch and slipped the gear shift into low.

"Oh—you'll be late? How late, dear?" she asked with the color leaping into her usually pale cheeks.

Impatiently he held his foot on the clutch. "Oh a couple of hours or maybe three. I have to drive over to Speedwell's after business and it may take me some time there."

Nora nodded. "All right, I'll look for you when I see you dear."

Until he had driven five miles Merrick thought nothing of his wife nor her slight flush nor her words. Now, however, they returned to him poignantly. Why should she want to know just how late he would be? What was she going to do with the time? Why had the color sprung into her cheeks so quickly? Was it possible that there was some one she would see in that time? Nora was always busy all day between superintending the house, looking after the children and giving her attention to certain social amenities that could not be overlooked. He knew to a moment just where she would be and what she would be doing at any hour of the day.

He had called up on the telephone frequently enough to know that. Also he often gave Minette, Nora's personal maid, a $5 bill just to keep him in touch, as he called it, with her mistress's doings. Still, he reflected, a maid does not know everything.

He remembered suddenly how Nora had smiled at young Mills at the last Country club dinner. Was it possible—could they—he found himself driving on with set lips and glassy eyes. His Nora! To be sure, he had long since ceased to love her wildly as he had when they had first been married. Five years of married life will accomplish that if nothing else.

Yet, young Mills! And had she or had she not exchanged glances with Merrivale at the polo grounds?

As the day passed Merrick managed to call to mind some dozen cases where Nora had seemed more than slightly interested in some man other than her husband. Yes, he had probably lost her. He had grown careless and this was his reward. At closing time he had worked himself up into such a frenzy about the whole thing that he drove straight home instead of going to Speedwell's. He was home a half hour earlier than usual.

Minette was passing the front door and her eyes frowned as she saw him.

"Madame is not—expecting you—yet—" she said, falteringly, in reply to his inquiry.

"No—well, I'll go right on up," he said trying to be casual.

"But—it would be best if you—" began Minette.

Without reply he went up the staircase, past her, the veins in his throat swelling uncomfortably. Throwing open the door of her room, he stood on the threshold, glaring.

There was a sudden yelp—hardly human—but he recognized the tone as that of his wife.

And his wife's face—gray as ash!

"Well?" he said harshly.

"Oh, Merrick, I thought you going to be late," she said lamely.

"There is so little time during the day and I thought this would be a good chance to use my clay mask stuff."

And Nora wondered why it was that with the crumbling clay on her face her husband took her into his arms and affectionately caressed her.

"It just shows," she told herself later, "that men don't care a rap for looks—because who could be pretty in a clay mask!"

Happy is the house that shelters a friend! It might well be built, like a festal bower or arch, to entertain him for a single day.—Emerson.

For Safety Sake

"CUTTING-IN" as an accident cause can be eliminated if motorists will remember that safety requires waiting until the car just passed can be seen in the rear view mirror before turning back into the same traffic lane.

Flying around a corner in a car and honking all the way doesn't relieve your conscience if you hit someone.

Dirt on lenses may reduce the light intensity of automobile headlights from 10 to 50 per cent. In addition to glare caused by scattering of the light beam.

On long trips, get out of the car frequently and "stretch your legs." Tired muscles react slowly.

Speed must be consistent with volume of traffic, condition of road and time of day, even if laws allow a greater speed. Never drive so that you cannot stop quickly enough to meet any emergency.

According to scientific tests, the ear responds to a warning faster than the eye does. Thus, a bell, whistle or horn causes a driver to put on the brake faster than when he sees a signal.

The most important safety device on any motor car is the driver, safety officials point out. Even the "self-starter" needs a foot to start it, and the best brakes require quick toe pressure to stop the car.

Wrong Again!

IT APPEARS some pupils "no" all the questions at test time, as witness the following answers:

"A hostage is a lady who entertains visitors."

"Etc." is a sign to make you believe more than you do."

"Mussolini is a sort of strong material used by women who love."

"Dust is mud with the juice squeezed out."

And one little fellow said: "The trouble with problems is you work just as hard to get 'em wrong as to get 'em right!"

WILLIAM MACLEOD RAINE'S To Ride the River With

SYNOPSIS

Ruth Chiswick of L. C. ranch, obsessed by fear of danger to her outspoken father, Lee, from a band of lawless rustlers headed by Ebern Howard, decides to save him by eloping with young Lou Howard, Sherman's son, and comes to the town of Tall Holt to meet him.

CHAPTER IV—Continued

He pulled on his boots and swiftly examined his revolver. That the weapon rested lightly in his holster so that there would be no hindrance to a quick draw he made sure.

CHAPTER V

Their host maneuvered Norris to a rocking-chair, Howard to a straight-backed one. Curley he seated at the foot of the bed. Gray stood in a shadowy corner farthest from the window.

"No objections to you staying here, Mr. Gray."

"A little crowded in here, gents," Gray said lightly. "Hope you don't mind sitting on the bed, Mr. Connor. I'm short of chairs."

"Suits me," Curly answered. Gray nodded, turned his attention to the big man. "I hated to trouble you to come here, Mr. Howard," he said apologetically.

"For some folks," Norris added with an insolent laugh. Gray smiled. "My idea, too, Mr. Norris. I want to find out if I'm one of those folks."

nose, light red hair, gray eyes, scar on back of left hand. Will probably fight desperately before being taken.

Curly lifted his eyes and grinned at Gray. "Certainly reads like it might be you, unless you've got a twin brother the spittin' image of you, even to the scar on yore hand."

"That's right," Norris assented. "I didn't read it careful. Well, Mr. Duke—Gray, I mean—it's a pleasure to meet up with a famous man like you."

"This is private information," the fugitive said. "I don't expect the word passed around among yore friends. I'm lying low for a while, you understand."

reckon that's not information to yore friends." "Meaning me?" asked Norris, his eyes alighted.

"I've asked myself why often enough since," Gray replied, shaking his head. "Damfino why. Nary chip, Mr. Howard. But I had just been eating supper with him as my guest, and I reckon my notion must have been to see he got a fair break."

Tony Flores, one of the vaqueros, rode in to the big house with word that there had been another raid on L. C. stock.

"How do you know?" Lee Chiswick demanded. "Ran across the tracks of a bunch being driven up Box canyon," the Mexican said.

"Bring your slickers," the boss snapped. "No war-sacks. We're traveling light. You won't be sitting on your spurs any this trip. Got to hot-foot it over a cold trail."

"About half a dozen of 'em with a bunch of young stut traveling lickety-split," Sorley said, "in one hell of a hurry. Here's a big long-stepping horse with outside shoes. This one has a broken hoof. You'll be pleased to know, Lee, that the lying scut who calls himself Jeff Gray is with them. Must have ridden right over from the line-camp."

"Here it is again. Begorry, I'd swear to that on a stack of Bibles. Gray's roan made it." "Hmp! He've got him at last so he can't get out of it. He's one of the Tall Holt rustling gang," Chiswick's salient jaw set.

Star Dust Movie Whereabouts How to Kiss a Girl Toys for Crosby

HAVE you frequently felt when you were at the movies, that you'd like to know where some of the scenes were taken? Harry Sherman, producer of the "Hopping Cassidy" pictures, has solved that long-standing need.

It looks as if Metro had a winner in "Three Comrades," the sequel to "All Quiet on the Western Front." Robert Taylor really had a chance to be dramatic in this one.

Wayne Morris has found, to his sorrow, that kissing a girl for the movies is pretty complicated and decidedly difficult.

Peg La Centra is the joy of radio program directors. Not only does she sing (probably you've heard her on the "For Men Only" programs), but she acts the female character parts in the dramatic sketches as well.

Bing Crosby's wife went to New York to have a lot of fun and do a lot of shopping. And what do you suppose she bought? Clothes and toys for those four small Crosby boys!

Shows How You Can Help to Avoid Anemia by Including These Blood-Building Minerals in the Diet

OF ALL the nutrition problems that challenge the homemaker, none is more important than supplying her family's need for iron.

How Blood Is Constructed If you should examine a drop of blood under the microscope, you would observe that it is composed of red cells and white cells.

Lack of Iron May Lead to Anemia In many young people the blood does not function normally, though frequently parents are unaware that anything is wrong.

Two Forms of Anemia Anemia may be due to loss of blood, deficient blood formation, or to increased blood destruction in the body.

How Much Iron? It is believed that about 10 percent of the total hemoglobin in adults is destroyed daily. And for this reason iron-rich foods must be included in the diet every day.

MEN WHO PLAN HOW

(Rotarian Magazine)

IT IS strange. But it happens so often that it must be a response to something basic in human nature. In so-called hard times, when many business men complain that "there is no business," other business men contrive to find business; and, what is perhaps still more astonishing, new enterprises put down roots, get a healthy start, make sturdy beginnings of vigorous growth.

Is it that these business "downs" have special purposes which many of us, blinded by easy success in more prosperous periods, fail to see and use?

The late Edward A. Filene, a merchant, of Boston, Mass., whose thinking was never bounded by national borders, once said, "I have noticed that business success tends to breed business failure. Success often makes men contented; lessens incentive. It is when people are not doing very well with what they already have that they are most willing to listen to and try out new ideas that may save them."

A certain chewing gum manufacturer, a great believer in advertising, undertook one of his most impressive advertising campaigns during a time of severe business stringency. His competitors were cutting down, or cutting out, their advertising. He doubled his appropriation. He reasoned that with fewer advertisements seeking reader attention, his own aggressive copy would attract all the more notice; and it worked out exactly that way.

Great industrial improvements have been made, or initiated, in periods far from prosperous. Charles E. Duryea, first to build a successful automobile in the United States, began his first car in 1891, was building his fifth in 1894; and between these two years the country was passing through one of the worst panics ever known. The basic work on the first telephone was done by Alexander Graham Bell in the early '70s, when the United States was rocked by the post-Civil War panic. Instances of this kind, great or small, could be multiplied almost endlessly, but more to the point would be the personal parallel many a reader may draw as he recalls times when he was so hard pressed that, to survive, he had to do strenuous new thinking and make drastic revisions of unprofitable habits—which revealed hitherto untapped potentialities that proved his salvation—and more.

Men who plan constructively now, may find that these so-called troubled times, viewed in the light of what they can do for us instead of what they appear to be doing to us, will yield magic returns.

GET A RUNNING START.

To get a job—get to work doing something that leads in the direction of a job. Get a running start first.

This is the counsel of Walter B. Pitkin, author and psychologist, gives to 1938's June graduates—an army equal in numbers to the population of Cleveland, Ohio—as it is turned loose to shift for itself for the first time.

"The most important thing for any youngster out of high school and college to learn is not the particular skill of any single job, but rather what the real world is like," declares Dr. Pitkin in an article on "How to get a Start in Life" in the current Rotarian Magazine. "Once the job seeker has got the feel of reality, then he is in a position to move on to his own higher problem of a living and a career."

"But the real world is a tough place to jump into the cold," he concedes. "It's tackled best by the youth who has warmed to the task of finding a job—by getting this running start first. Bright youngsters are beginning to learn the importance of changing the old saying 'Well done is half done' to 'Early begun is half done.'"

"Time and again young people now in jobs tell me that summer and vacation work during their school years has been of inestimable value," Dr. Pitkin points out. "Thus a young engineer, who writes me that in his opinion one of the greatest problems confronting a beginner is his inability to understand what will be expected of him in his first position. For that reason I would suggest that one secure all the experience he can by working in various kinds of jobs while in school. They help him get the feel of the shop."

Quite instances in which ambitious and energetic young men accepted jobs with little or no pay to get this running start. Dr. Pitkin insists that many of them may land permanent jobs as a result of their volunteer work. The young man who says, "I'll work for you for nothing; it's better for me than loafing around home," is the one who will get the experience in the real world which will enable him to get a running start as he starts in life, he maintains.

Our War Dead and Their Living Comrades

America is a nation interested only in the conquests of peace. Yet, in our country's short history, millions of our best sons have had to face the dangers and sacrifices of war.

We pay reverent tribute to the valor and patriotism of our soldiers, living and dead. At the same time, we give our solemn pledge to our youth of today, to work unceasingly for the cause of peace, so that their lives and their talents may be used to build civilization—not to tear it down.

DONT BUY COAL BLINDLY
Specify 'blue coal'

It's America's finest Anthracite

BUYING coal used to be more or less a gamble. You never knew, until you put it in your furnace, whether it was good or bad.

But now, by specifying 'blue coal' you can be absolutely sure of getting the very best every time you order.

'blue coal' comes from the rich anthracite fields of Northern Pennsylvania. It is prepared for home use with the utmost care—washed and re-washed in torrents of rushing water—tested and inspected by keen-eyed experts. Then as your guarantee of quality it is colored a distinctive Blue.

'blue coal' burns evenly... steadily... completely with the least waste up the chimney and in the ashpit. If you want better heat this winter for less money, insist on 'blue coal'. Please us your order today.

MORAL: Never Take Your Girl Friend Fishing

1. In the spring a young man's fancy may turn to most anything. With Tommy Powers of Ocean county, N. J., it's a matter of teaching his best girl—Mary Lou Powell—how to catch a fish. Mary Lou doesn't fancy putting that fat, wiggling worm on a hook and we don't blame her. But she must be a good fellow—or stay home.

2. Beginner's luck, that's all. Mary Lou brings two fat flounders over the side while Tommy still waits for his first bite. Mary Lou must be bad luck, for in the spring a fellow can usually catch flounders in Barnegat bay as fast as he can offer them worms—providing he doesn't have a woman along.

3. Mary Lou learns that stringing fish at the end of the day is different than crocheting. As for Tommy, he'll go fishing alone next time!

Turn Her Loose With Paint And She'll Accomplish Things

BY BETTY WELLS
WHAT a lady and a can of paint, between them, can't accomplish is nobody's business. Right now we're interested in Helen V's plans for her bedroom. Because her own ingenuity with paint is going to be the main expenditure on the room, we're betting that it's going to have plenty of charm.

It's a small farm-house room, just repapered in a yellow, flowered paper on a white ground. The ceiling has yellow paper with tiny white dots. The bed is old fashioned, a Jenny Lind type, painted ivory and the dresser is old and oak. The old washstand she's planning to use as a dressing table.

But what she's really worried about is the paint to choose for the floor, woodwork and furniture and the material for the dressing table skirt.

We suggested that she paint the floor a soft gray, then have the dresser and bed painted the yellow of the ceiling. The woodwork we'd prefer in the ground white or the wall paper. The dressing table skirt would be nicest in yellow organdy or yellow dotted Swiss.

Another reader with a paint problem has a wood bed and an old dresser to be used in an attic room. The room is to be repapered, and the dresser and floor will be repainted. What colors? What paper? What should be done about the furniture?

Why not gray paper with a small all-over pattern of pink flowers and ribbons, something that can go over ceiling as well as side wall. Then for woodwork the gray of the paper and for the furniture the lightest pink in the floral. The floor we'd paint black, the bedspread and curtains we'd like in plain pink voile or dimity made with six-inch ruffles.

Cool Tailoring

Presenting a tailored air and yet delightfully cool for warm weather, this frock worn by Esther Brodelet, Twentieth Century-Fox player, is made of navy blue chiffon printed in red, pale yellow and green. Dainty collar and cuffs of white organdie add to its look of freshness.

She Had Nerve

"It took as much courage as when I cut my hair," drawled Prissy Kent when we had exclaimed properly over her living room.

We could imagine that it had taken plenty of nerve. Because she'd used two marvelous paisley shawls for draperies at her windows. They were perfect in the room but imagine cutting them up!

"Well, I've kept them in moth balls for years, thinking they were too good to use," Prissy explained. "Then I decided that I might as well get some pleasure out of them. So there they are!"

Why not, indeed? We'd probably have felt the same way. She's just had their house done over, with knotty pine walls in the living room. Their maple furniture was pleasantly livable here, with its mellow tones and unassuming heartiness. Wide built-in book shelves with book bindings that made a medley of deep glowing colors patterned one wall. Opposite the two windows seem to need just the tones of a paisley shawl.

"At first, I thought I'd get a paisley print," said Prissy, "but the two real paisleys kept tempting me and making the prints look like nothing by comparison. So finally I just up and slashed right into them. Each shawl made a pair of draperies. I backed them with a strong rep made to extend enough at the top to fasten the rings to, so there wouldn't be strain on the shawls. Then I lined and weighted them and there you are."

A STORY FOR BEDTIME

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

IT IS strange how fast news travels. There isn't anything that happens faster. The day after it happened everybody on the Green Meadows and in the Green Forest and around the Smiling Pool knew all about the joke Buster Bear had played on Reddy Fox and Granny Fox and Old Man Coyote. Buster didn't tell it himself, and you may be very sure that Reddy and Granny and Old Man Coyote didn't tell it. Peter Rabbit didn't tell it, because Peter was safe in the dear Old Briar Patch when it happened and didn't know anything about it until the Merry Little Breezes of Old Mother West Wind came dancing that way and told him about it. It must have been Hooty the Owl who told it, for he was the only one who saw it.

Anyway, some one told it, and then whoever heard it told the first one they met and so it spread and spread until everybody knew about it. Paddy the Beaver chuckled over it as he swam about in his private pond deep in the Green Forest. Grandfather Frog chuckled over it as he sat on his big green lily-pad in the Smiling Pool, watching for foolish green flies. Danny Meadow Mouse chuckled over it as he scampered along his little paths under the grass on the Green Meadows.

So Buster Bear as he prowled about in the Green Forest found that he was no longer lonesome. Every one he met was very polite and said "good morning," and hoped he was feeling very well. It was very pleasant, very pleasant, indeed, to have some one to speak to, and, because he really is one of the best natured fellows in the world, he began to think how he could show his neighbors that they really were their friend and that they need not be afraid of him. He was studying and studying about this when who should come along but Jimmy Skunk.

Now, you know, Jimmy isn't afraid of anybody and when he saw Buster Bear in the path in front of him he didn't even step aside. It was Buster Bear who stepped aside. "Good morning, Jimmy Skunk," said Buster.

"Morning," replied Jimmy, rather crossly. "I hope you are feeling happy this fine morning," said Buster, who wanted some one to talk to. "I'd feel better if I could find some fat beetles," grumbled Jimmy.

"Is that all you need to make you happy?" asked Buster. "I saw three only a few minutes ago."

"Where?" asked Jimmy eagerly, and his face brightened and his voice didn't sound so grumpy. "They ran under that old log and I guess they're there now," replied Buster.

Jimmy's face fell. The log was so big that he knew he couldn't budge it if he tried all day. He was just about to do something unpleasant

This status is unquestioned as his symphony, "Elegiacs," was given its first performance in New York, with John Barbrill conducting. For many years, critical opinion discounted him as somewhat of an outlaw and disturber. Now it has caught up with him, as it did with Stravinsky and Richard Strauss. Both the "Fire Bird" and "Salome" were met with cat-calls when they were first produced. Critics note some mysterious "energizing influence" in Malpiero's new symphony. It may be an afterthought, but the explanation seems clear as I recall my conversation with him. His face saddened and he seemed ten years older when I mentioned the war.

For his ballet, "Pantea," he had written of "the struggle of a soul hurling itself into the struggle for liberty, only to find oblivion and death." The war had been to him a tragic and devastating experience. He said it had profoundly shaken both his art and his life.

Never again would the suave fluencies or banalities of music have meaning for him. He was impelled to a deeper search. This disillusionment was subtlety sabotaged in irony. He was suspected of slyly sabotaging the grandiose new Italian state. It was in March, 1934, that his opera, "The Fable of the Exchanged Sons," with the text by Luigi Pirandello, all but caused a riot in the Royal opera house.

So far as I could learn at the time, there was no brass band in the work, but, as elaborated by the text, a subtle hint that ultimate truth is forever elusive and supreme power dead sea fruit. That, of course, is dangerous doctrine in a totalitarian state, and it was quickly and savagely resented. The next day, Il Duce forbade another presentation.

Malpiero is a poet and a mystic. Of dominant presence, with sharply cut Roman features and hair brushed back in a thick pompadour, he is at the same time extraordinarily gracious, friendly and unassuming. He lives in a quaint stone villa, forty or fifty miles from Venice, centuries old, rambling and tumble-down. Cut in the stone door lintel there is a Latin text. "To the ob-scene, all things are obscene." That was his answer to the critics of one of his operas.

The art of living engrosses him as much as the art of music and he studiously maintains a relationship of dignity and friendly intimacy with the creatures in his retreat—he has a gift for friendship with animals and thinks that much of the trouble of mankind is due to its insensitiveness to the subhuman and superhuman. His music is apt to range into those zones. He was born in Venice in 1882, beginning his violin studies in his sixth year. His father was a political exile and the family was in Germany for many years. Wagner was a crashing strain of modernity which profoundly affected his work.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK.—Meeting Francesco Malpiero at a party in the Royal Danieli in Venice, soon after the World war, I thought he was one of the most charming and brilliant, and, at the same time, most cryptic men I had ever seen. There was in the company another Italian musician, a famous conductor, who was the lion of the evening. I have forgotten his appearance and his name, but everything about Signor Malpiero is vividly remembered.

On the way home in a gondola, I asked the conductor for an appraisal of Signor Malpiero as a musician. There was considerable condensation in the reply.

Malpiero was gifted but erratic, it was evident that he was "unsound," in some deeply subversive sense. But my virginal eagerly agreed that the Signor was a most extraordinary human personality.

As recently as four years ago, a Malpiero opera threw the Royal opera house of Rome into a tumult of howling and cat-calls. Mussolini banned it as "inimical to the faith and sound teachings of the new Italy." But, by this time, Malpiero had become a world-famous musician, and he was soon restored to favor.

"Outlaw" of Music Now Is Lionized
This status is unquestioned as his symphony, "Elegiacs," was given its first performance in New York, with John Barbrill conducting. For many years, critical opinion discounted him as somewhat of an outlaw and disturber. Now it has caught up with him, as it did with Stravinsky and Richard Strauss. Five Second Prizes $10.00 Each
Ten Third Prizes $5.00 Each

ONLY a few days are left before the close of our big Cake Recipe Contest. For all entries must be postmarked not later than May 31, 1938.

But there is still time for you to enter a recipe. Send in the directions for that cake which your family says is the best ever... which you bake for company... or always send to the church fair.

It will only take a few moments of your time to write out the recipe and you have nothing to buy... no letter to write. There never was an easier contest! Just fill out the attached coupon calling for your name, address, the brand of shortening, baking powder and flour used in your cake. Clip the coupon to the recipe and mail it to C. Houston Goudis, author of the "WHAT TO EAT AND WHY" series in this newspaper.

16 Cash Prizes. The winning cakes will be selected by the experienced home economists on the staff of the Experimental Kitchen Laboratory that he maintains in New York City. The recipe adjudged the best will win $25.00 for the lucky homemaker who submits it. There will be five second prizes of $10.00 each and ten third prizes of $5.00 each.

Prize winning recipes, together with those receiving honorable mention from the judges, will be printed in a booklet, to be distributed nationally.

Simple or Elaborate Recipe. There are no restrictions as to the type of recipe that may be submitted. Your favorite cake may be plain or frosted. It may be baked in layers or in a loaf—put together with a cream filling or topped with a meringue. It may be chocolate, maple, mocha, spiced, Devil's Food, a jelly roll or a Lady Baltimore. The proof will be in the eating! That $25.00 first prize would come in handy for buying summer clothes or something special that you want for the house. You have nothing to lose, everything to gain, so why not write out your recipe—now. Attach the coupon and mail it to C. Houston Goudis, 6 East 39th Street, New York City.

TIMES SQUARE NEW YORK

Strad Had Rivals

Although Stradivarius is Cremona's greatest star, the town claims other noted violin makers. Among them is Stradivarius' teacher, Nicolo Amati, who set up his workshop in Cremona about 1620. The favorite instrument of the violinist Paganini was a violin by Giuseppe Guarneri, Cremona. Cremona still makes musical instruments, especially violins and pianos. It also manufactures more prosaic products, such as bricks of special construction used in American skyscrapers. Cremona was founded by the Romans in 219 B. C., but was razed by Vespasian in 70 A. D., and again in 540 by the Goths.

HELP KIDNEYS

To Get Rid of Acid and Poisonous Waste
Your kidneys help to keep you well by constantly filtering waste matter from the blood. If your kidneys get functionally disordered and fail to remove excess impurities, there may be poisoning of the whole system and body-wide distress.
Burning, scanty or too frequent urination may be a warning of some kidney bladder disturbance.
You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up at night, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous; all played out.
In such cases it is better to rely on a medicine that has won country-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Use Doan's Pills. A multitude of grateful people recommend Doan's. Ask your neighbor!

One-Man Attack On Dreadnaught

Stamford, Conn.—Lester P. Barlow, aerial munitions expert, says this "diving bomb" could destroy a battleship and the pilot could live to tell about it. The bomb would be launched at 10,000 feet, glide to 3,500 feet and then dive on the ship. The pilot would escape with a parachute and a rubber boat, carrying enough concentrated food to last for days.

Every muscle in the body is brought into play by correct gymnastic exercises utilizing the "horse" shown above. Weight is carried on the arms to hoist the body across. Posed by Ann Rutherford.

TWO-MINUTE BIOGRAPHIES

EDOUARD DALADIER
France's new premier has dictatorial powers for the coming few months in an effort to pull his government out of financial and social morass. Serving in this position for the second time, he brings to the post a varied background in governmental affairs that bodes success for his efforts. Daladier was born June 18, 1884. After a year as mayor of Carpentras and deputy for Vaucluse, he entered politics and was branded as a revolutionary. But in the post-war chamber of deputies he was noted not so much for his revolutionary ideas as for his silence. Premier Herriot made him minister of colonies in 1924 and in that position he began working under a definite plan to build schools, roads and ports. Moreover, his work was economical. Later Joseph Paul-Boncour made him minister of war. His first premiership was from January to December, 1933, shortly after he became leader of the radical majority. On an issue of setting the country's finances in order he was defeated by the withdrawal of socialist support. Now, back in the saddle, his strong-arm methods, tempered by common sense, would likely save France from the fate to which it was drifting.

Quarrel or Fight

"Many a man seems to enjoy a quarrel," said Uncle Eben, "on de theory dat it's better dan a fight."

Fire-Walker, Holy Men

Fire-walkers of southern India may be classed as holy men of a sort. Smiling, and wearing flowers, they walk over hot stones or smoldering ashes. Although they are barefooted, they seem never to burn their feet.

Monaco Is Very Small

The country of Monaco, where tourists go who visit Monte Carlo, is so small that Rhode Island, our smallest state, could contain over 2,000 countries of the same size.

GUIDE-BOOK

to GOOD VALUES

When you plan a trip abroad, you can take a guide-book and figure out exactly where you want to go, how long you can stay, and what it will cost you. To save you time, the obliging author has marked especially interesting places with a star, or two or three—so that when you land in Europe, you know exactly where to go and what to look at. The advertisements in this paper are really a guide-book to good values... brought up to date every week. If you make a habit of reading them carefully, you can plan your shopping trips and save yourself time, energy and money.

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

Brown Griddle Cakes.—If a teaspoon of molasses or brown sugar is added to griddle-cake batter, the cakes will brown more easily.

Luncheon for Children.—Bananas sliced over crumbled graham crackers and served with milk make a delicious luncheon for young children.

Fruit Gelatin.—To prevent diced fruits dropping to the bottom of a gelatin mold, chill fruits and add when gelatin mixture has partly congealed.

Protect Mattresses.—Mattress pads help both sheets and mattresses to wear longer.

Washing Tumblers.—Before using hot water to wash tumblers that have contained milk, rinse them in cold water and they will wash easier.

FARM TOPICS

WILDLIFE AIDS IN CHECKING EROSION

Animals Devour or Trample Scanty Pasturage.

Supplied by the United States Department of Agriculture.—WNU Service. One great difference between domestic and wild birds and animals is the effect they have on the land, particularly on soil erosion. It is common for farmers to pasture fields already injured by erosion—gullied land too rough for machine tillage or patches where running water has taken most of the topsoil. On such land, pasturage is likely to be scanty. If cattle, sheep or hogs are turned in they usually devour or trample such vegetation as may be left, says Dr. Ira N. Gabrielson of the bureau of biological survey. This increases the erosion damage.

Wildlife, in contrast, lives in and with the natural vegetation that develops in these rough areas not suitable for cropping. Rarely do creatures of the wild contribute to erosion. Rather, they allow vegetation to develop and hold the soil. Farmers can help, too, says Doctor Gabrielson, by seeding or planting quick-growing plants and trees that are soil binders and also provide cover and food for game. Catering slightly to the feeding and nesting habits of the game will attract birds and animals and increase the game crop which sportsmen will be glad to harvest—and pay for the privilege.

Domestic animals are likely to further destroy land that has been injured by cultivation. The same land devoted to wildlife will be preserved and even improved. This contrast often points out the difference between good management and poor management of the rougher and less fertile parts of a farm.

Hens Have Colds; Roup More Severe Infection

Much that is called roup is more of the nature of colds and the fowls affected will recover if given clean, dry quarters, free from direct drafts but with ample ventilation, advises an expert in the Rural New-Yorker. True roup is a more severe infection and it cannot be said that any remedy known to poultrymen is effective to cure it. Any sick birds should be removed from contact with the healthy members of the flock to prevent spread of the infection. A fowl showing roup in at all severe form is of little or no value, and usually may be disposed of to the advantage of flock and owner.

It should be borne in mind, however, that all colds are not roup and that recoveries from the former under good care may give an unwarranted reputation for value to whatever is used in treatment.

Minerals for Hens

The lime needed by laying hens is cheaply and satisfactorily supplied in crushed oyster shells. A limestone grit may also be used as a source of this element. Milk and the meat scrap, customarily made part of the poultry rations, add other minerals and the addition of iron, sulphur, iodine, etc., as separate ingredients, lacks demonstration of its necessity, if nothing more. While minerals are essential elements of a poultry ration, they are found in the grains and supplements commonly fed, as they are also in the grains and roughage of dairy feeds.

Bone Meal Valuable

Many experiments have been conducted throughout the world to determine the availability of calcium and phosphorus in different forms. Results show that sterilized bone meal is as available as other chemical forms that are soluble in water. Feeding large quantities of minerals to animals that they do not require may be definitely detrimental. Indications of mineral deficiency should be taken up with the agricultural experiment station, where such problems can be investigated and recommendations made according to the requirements.

Weeds Add to Expenses

Weeds are expensive. It is estimated that they cost, on the average, $2 per tillable acre of soil. That means that on a 100-acre farm, the loss would amount to $200, a sum that would go far toward paying the taxes on that land. The loss caused by weeds includes not only yields, but also much extra labor, dockage in marketing, poisoning of live stock and increase in plant diseases and insect pests harbored by weeds.

Nests for Turkeys

Where breeding plans include only making the best of things at hand, a good kind of nest for turkeys is the simply constructed A-type coop, according to a poultryman in the Los Angeles Times. In placing these coops for hens, a depression should be scooped in the ground under them and, if the weather is dry, three or four gallons of water should be poured in each hole several days before making up the nest. This is to provide a supply of moisture.

Meadowlarks Consume Pests

The farmer has every reason to encourage the meadowlarks in his fields in view of the birds' beneficial food habits. Both the boll weevil (in the cotton country) and the alfalfa weevil are eaten by meadowlarks. The ornithologists have discovered that around 25 per cent of all the food eaten by meadowlarks consists of beetles. They also are fond of caterpillars. Among these are many cutworms and the well known and hated army worm.

HARRINGTON STUDENT
WINS FOUNTAIN PEN AWARD

In the seventh annual news examination conducted by Scholastic, the America high school weekly, Edward Legates, a pupil of the Junior Class at Harrington High School, won a prize fountain pen.

Less than 5 per cent of the papers in the 650 high schools which gave the examination, scored high enough to earn this award. The pupils who make the six best grades in the country receive trips to Washington. Twenty-four pupils tied for this trip, and are now taking a supplementary examination.

"DANGER VALLEY"

O. O. McIntyre:

A book that fascinated me is Gelett Burgess' "Look Eleven Years Younger." Burgess has the liveliest mind I know in the writing world and this book proves it. It's different.

Emily Post:

"I think you have not only found the elixir of youth for yourself, but are giving your readers all the ingredients of which it is made.

As one who could never have taught little children manners without help from "THE GOOPS, I am sure that no question about Charm can from now on be answered without turning to your advice on being—not merely looking—Eleven Years Younger."

New York Times:

It is a witty book, but not a particularly amusing one. It is encouraging, but not flattering; indeed, it is quite stern. But it ought to be genuinely stimulating and useful, along lines of definite and sensible self-help.

William Lyon Phelps:

Nonfiction—

1. Look Eleven Years Younger.

The advice given here by Mr. Burgess, accompanied as it is by photographs that should produce conviction of sin, must be taken to heart; for I believe everyone over 30 can here learn something to his advantage. He tells us to beware of mannerisms and acquiescence; and his pictures of real people show how persons of 40 are already beginning to jell. Look out!

"Look Eleven Years Younger"

By Gelett Burgess

New York World-Telegram:
Thirty years ago, in 1907, Gelett Burgess wrote "Are You a Bromide?" It fell like a bomb from the sky and took the town by storm.

Now he writes a hopeful, exhilarating book that effects you as if your grammar school teacher has taken you by the collar and is shaking you awake. I don't usually hold with books written by professional smile salesmen. Gelett Burgess is not a professional exhorter; he means what he says, and he has said it all his life.

This is a useful book. I recommend it. So do Simon & Schuster, who hope it will catch up with Dale Carnegie's "How to Win Friends," now past 500,000. So far as I'm concerned, it's already left Carnegie asleep at the post.

Providence, R. I. Journal:

This is not a beautician's manual. There is no routine of exercise creams and massage offered. It is simply a careful, entertaining study of the unnecessary surrender we are wont to make to habit. Read it and weep! But then dry your eyes and reform.

St. Louis Globe-Democrat:

One can't help feeling at least a few months younger after reading Gelett Burgess' latest contribution to the library of how to improve oneself. The spirit in which it is written, aside from the sound advice contained therein, assures a sensation of chronological retrogression."

For he has a vivid, semi-humorous style which emphasizes his views on the unconscious things we do which add to our appearance of growing older.

The book should be a huge success and drive people to making themselves not only younger, but far more attractive to themselves their families and their companions. We are all for it.
